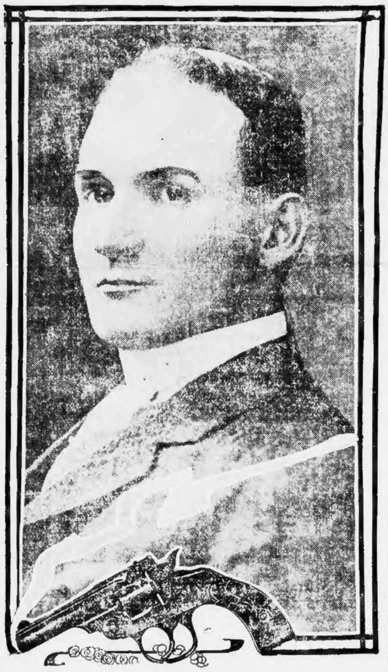
COURT TO COMPEL WEALTHY WIDOW TO TELL OF SLAIN CHAUFFEUR

INQUEST IN STAFFORD DEATH MYSTERY

KILLED AS A BURGLAR BROTHERS CRY "PLOT"



REGINALD B. STAFFORD

Court to Insist That Aged Mrs. Sutton Give Full Details of Her Knowledge of the Events Leading Up to the Killing of Her Employe as a Burglar.

Special to the Boston American.

NORTH ANDOVER, July 14.—The inquest into the killing of Reginald Stafford, the chauffeur of Mrs. Eben Sutton, the millionaire widow of General Sutton, by Edward Ruby, a butler, at her palatial country home at midnight, June 10, which began here to day, was adjourned until August 11, when the authorities will compel the wealthy widow to come here to tell what she knows of the mysterious tragedy.

The inquest is the result of the clamor of the mother and brothers of the dead man, who claim that young Stafford was not the victim of a mistake but that he was killed as the result of a plot that was concocted by jealous persons.

Woman Failed to Appear

At the brief hearing given Ruby, at which he was discharged, Mrs. Sutton, who employed him and who was at the house on the night of the shooting, did not appear. She has never been seen even by the authorities who have been at work on the case. The relatives of the dead chauffeur declare that she could tell things about him that would help in the solution of the alleged crime.

Nothing has so stirred up the people of this section of the country in many years as this case. The quickness with which it was disposed of in the first place called for criticism, and so strong did this become that District-Attorney Peters began to investigate the matter anew after it had apparently been disposed of by the court.

Soon after he was discharged, Ruby disappeared, and there were stories afloat to the effect that he had gone to Europe. Nearly all of the other employes of the wealthy family were discharged and it looked as though the authorities would not be able to get much information at the inquest.

Hearing Is Secret.

Judge Newton P. Frye, who at the police court hearing not only discharged Ruby, but complimented him on his loyalty to his employer, presided at the inquest. District Attorney W. Scott Peters examined the witnesses. The hearing was held in secret. Only one witness was admitted at a time to the room in the local police court, where the session was held.

Ruby was induced to return for the inquest and was called as the first witness. He told the same story that he did when he was arraigned in the police court. His story was that he and Orlando, another butler, were sitting up, talking, at midnight, and that they heard a noise down stairs. They went down and saw the feet of a man extending from under a sofa. Ruby thought the man was a burglar and fired two shots, one of which killed Stafford.

Ernest Orlando, the second butler, testified that he was talking to Ruby in Ruby's room when they heard a noise downstairs. Together they went to investigate, Ruby carrying a revolver and Orlando holding a candle. In the parlor they saw a pair of feet under the lounge. Ruby fired at the feet. Then Stafford crawled from under the lounge and rolled over on the floor dead.

MOTHER TO BE HEARD.

Other witnesses at the inquest were Mr. and Mrs. John H. Scoville and five servant girls, who were in the Sutton house at the time of the tragedy. Mrs. Scoville is Mrs. Sutton's daughter. Within a month of the shooting Stafford had been discharged by Scoville and re-engaged by Mrs. Sutton.

After the inquest adjourned Ruby left for New York. At the next session, Aug. 11, the mother of Stafford and his two brothers will be witnesses, and it is believed their testimony will prove sensational.

Mrs. Stafford has said that her son had a picture of the rich widow in a locket attached to his watch and that there was talk of their marriage.

'ZAZA,' STUDENT'S BRIDE BUT WILL NOT ADMIT IT

MRS. LESLIE CARTER TELLS CLERGYMEN SHE IS 30 AND THIS HER FIRST MARRIAGE.

The action of Mrs. Leslie Carter and her automobile party at the Hotel Touraine, where they stopped last night and from which they departed to-day, only added to the mystery that surrounds her marriage yesterday to William L. Payne, a theatrical man from Albany, at Portsmouth, N. H.

Mrs. Carter left the Hotel Touraine in company with her maid at 10:30 to-day, by way of the basement and Rathskeller. As she ran from the Tremont street entrance to the automobile awaiting her two or three reporters ran up to her and asked:

"Mrs. Carter, are you married?"

Mrs. Carter, who was heavily veiled, laughed in reply. She did not speak a word. She leaped into the machine and was quickly followed by her maid. Where her new husband was nobody about the hotel knew.

The automobile shot along Tremont street to Hollis, down Hollis to Washington and disappeared along that thoroughfare toward Roxbury. Mrs. Carter's baggage had been taken out of the hotel shortly before, piece by piece, so that it would not attract attention.

The greatest secrecy was maintained in the hotel about the romantic guests. None of the clerks was able to get a glimpse of the groom. The hotel register did not show that there was a Mrs. William L. Payne in the party.

A leased wire dispatch from New York to-day says that David Belasco, who said last night that he was astounded to hear of Mrs. Carter's marriage and could not believe it, admitted to-day that she had told him over the telephone that the story of her marriage was true.

Mother Does Not Believe It.

"I don't believe my daughter is married at all," declared Mrs. Carter's mother over the long-distance telephone from Shelter Island, L. I., to the BOSTON AMERICAN to-day.

"I have never received any communication from her to the effect that she contemplated marriage, and I cannot understand all these stories.

"My daughter never mentioned to me the name of this man Payne. I do not know him, and never heard of him."

"Have you received any communication whatever from your daughter within the past twenty-four hours announcing her marriage?" she was asked.

"No, I haven't received a telegram or any letter, and this talk of my daughter being married is all foolishness."

This morning at 4:45 Miss Norma Munroe, Mrs. Carter's private secretary, F. Dean, her manager, William Courtney, the actor, and Acton Davies, a New York newspaper man, were whirled away in one of the autos in which the party arrived

MURDER LONG PLANNED BY THAW, SAYS GARVAN

FIRST OFFICIAL STATEMENT IN WHITE CASE BY JEROME'S OFFICE.

NEW YORK, July 14.—The District Attorney's office, through Assistant District Attorney Garvan, to-day declared that when Harry K. Thaw is put on trial for the murder of Stanford White they will be able to show that the crime had been planned for months.

The statements of forty-three witnesses have been secured by Mr. Garvan, eleven of whom are women. Speaking of the case to-day, in the first official statement made from the District Attorney's office, Mr. Garvan said:

"We can show also that there was no reason that justified vengeance for wrongs which could possibly have inspired Harry Thaw to kill Stanford White. At the same time we have tried wherever we could to get reliable testimony of the alleged freakish conduct of Thaw during the last few years, with a view of studying his character and his mental calibre as well as to meet the prospective plea of insanity by the other side.

"PESTERED BY CRANKS."

"The State—and I presume this applies to the defence as well—has been pestered by all sorts of cranks and parasites. In nearly every instance investigation shows that their stories are valueless.

"A number of these witnesses have been most disappointing," continued Mr. Garvan. "For instance, the testimony of the actress and former artists' model associate of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, Rose Marston, was practically valueless to us. We have her affidavit, and we are through with her. Her testimony is of no importance. The same thing applied to the testimony of Mrs. Mayme [illegible], the woman who was supposed to have heard Thaw threaten White."

Thaw's wife spent but five minutes with her husband in the Tombs to-day, but before she went up to the tier where his cell is located she tried strenuously to persuade Warden Flynn to permit her friend, Miss May McKenzie, to see Harry. The warden said it was against the rules, and Miss McKenzie was forced to stay down stairs in the warden's waiting room.

FOUR LAWYERS SEE THAW.

No less than four lawyers saw Thaw in the Tombs, while Mrs. Thaw was with him, and each one did his utmost to try to have Miss McKenzie allowed to see the prisoner. What the object of the proposed talk between Thaw and Miss McKenzie was could not be learned. Thaw seemed much disappointed when he was told that he could not see his wife's friend.

"THAW CRAZY," IS REMARK QUOTED AS BY JEROME

NEW YORK, July 14.—"You cannot try this fellow criminally, because he is crazy!"

District Attorney Jerome is credited with having made that assertion regarding Harry Kendall Thaw, who is awaiting trial for the murder of Stanford White, and whose

$328,064 LOSS TO BEEF TRUST IN ONE MONTH

WASHINGTON, July 14.—The Beef Trust lost in the month of June $326,064 in the exportation of canned beef alone as compared with June, 1905, according to statistics given out to-day by the Department of Commerce and Labor.

This was the month when the agitation against unsanitary conditions in the Chicago packing houses reached its climax.

The number of pounds of canned beef exported last month was 2,977,979, as compared with 6,310,553 in June a year ago, a falling off of more than three million pounds. Exportations of hams also fell off more than three million pounds; salted and pickled pork, two million pounds, and lard nearly five million pounds.

There was an increase, however, of two and a half million pounds in the exportation of fresh beef.

LANDS HIS PRISONER, BUT HAS TO FIGHT

Deputy Marshal Ruhl Has Two Hard Tussles With Bridges of Arlington.

After two desperate struggles with the prisoner, Deputy United States Marshall "Jimmy" Ruhl succeeded to-day in getting into custody in the Federal building F. H. Bridges of Arlington, charged with using the mails to promote a scheme to defraud. In one of the struggles Rhule had to fight for a revolver drawn by Bridges.

Armed with a warrant, Ruhl and Postal Inspector Charles W. Perkins went to Bridges's house at No. 57 Bartlett street, Arlington, this noon. Bridges said it was his brother, probably, whom the men wanted. Ruhl was not to be fooled, however, and followed Bridges inside the house, Perkins staying outside. Bridges went to a dresser, opened a drawer and grabbed a revolver.

Ruhl caught the gleam of the steel just as its muzzle was swinging in line with his chest. He tackled Bridges and managed to get the revolver away from him.

Bridges said later that he intended to end his own life, but it didn't strike Ruhl that way.

The prisoner was walked down to a street car by the two officers and brought to Park street subway. On the way down to the Federal building, just as they had crossed Washington street at the foot of Bromfield, the prisoner jerked his arms loose and made a bolt for the middle of the street.

Ruhl made a running jump and landed square on the man's back, throwing him to the ground. Then Ruhl got his grip on Bridges's throat. Before the muscular little deputy got up Bridges was willing to arise and go quietly.

Bridges was arraigned immediately before Commissioner Bradlee and held in $2,000 for continued hearing next Tuesday. He will be represented by Vahey, Innes and Mansfield.

Bridges is charged specifically with using the mails to defraud Alsberg, Moritz & Company, of No. 22 Waverly Place, New York, out of $500 worth of goods secured on credit. The officers say that his alleged schemes have netted him upwards of $35,000.

BRIDE LEAVES HOME; IS NOT WANTED BACK

Mrs. Ella May Horton has lived in the home which Elsa L. Horton provided for her at No. 32 [illegible] street, Brookline, is now missing. Although Mr. Horton is worried as to what may have become of her, he declares that his experience has been such that he does not care to have her resume command over their cosy little flat.

Horton is a carpenter employed by R. W. Neal of Boylston street, is industrious and bears a good reputation. Mrs. Horton liked a good time. She was fond of the beaches and of the society of jolly people, while Horton wanted to settle down and make a home. He remonstrated with her about her tastes and the young woman did not take kindly to the admonishings.

Horton related the tale of his short and unhappy married life as follows: "Ella and I were married on June 2. The first few days everything went well. I gave her $20 each Saturday night when I returned from work, from which she was to provide all the household expenses and pay the rent. But when rent time came around she hadn't a cent to give the landlord. I naturally felt hurt, but she only laughed at me.

"Then some of her friends came around the house whom I did not like and I also chided her about that, but she told me that she would do as she pleased. I tried to argue with her, but she would not listen. In fact, one night after a little misunderstanding, she told me to my face that she had another husband living.

"That statement caused me to be suspicious, and I went through some of her belongings and found a memorandum book with the following entry: 'Married, May 25, 1891, separated August 26, 1891.'

"I will never take her back, and have given the matter to a lawyer. Just what I will do I cannot say, but I am through with her."

MORAN TRAILING SOLONS WHO USE RAILWAY PASSES

Lawyer MacFarland Will Examine Company Books to Get Law Breakers' Names.

Road Officials in Danger, Too, Though Van Etten Says It's "Nobody's Business."

Representing District Attorney John B. Moran, Lawyer Granville S. MacFarland, who was employed to make a special investigation of alleged grafting by members of the Legislature in connection with the railroads, as well as to probe affairs of the gas and electric light companies, began a search to-day for the names of all the members of the General Court who have railroad passes and who have made use of them during their terms of office.

This inquiry necessitates an examination of the books of the companies, which Mr. MacFarland will make. When he obtains the names of the men who have accepted these favors, he will then ascertain how they have voted in connection with railroad legislation.

It is a violation of the law for any member of the Legislature to accept a railroad pass and for any railway official to issue one to such a member of the government. Mr. Moran proposes not only to prosecute guilty members of the Legislature, if any are found, but railroad officials who have broken the law.

"Not Anybody's Business."

To a reporter of the BOSTON AMERICAN Vice-President Edgar Van Etten of the New York Central Railroad and manager of the Boston & Albany division said that he didn't consider it "anybody's business," nor "important enough to waste time talking about," when his attention was called to the declaration that the laws of the State had been violated in connection with railway passes.

President Charles S. Mellen of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, in a message to the BOSTON AMERICAN from Hartford to-day said:

"I have no knowledge of any passes being given to members of the Legislature by our company, do not believe that any such have been knowingly given, and shall be greatly surprised to learn that such is the case."

Representative Chester A. Gleason of Pittsfield rides on a railroad pass. He explained to-day that he had a right to do this because he is the New York Central ticket agent at Pittsfield.

Representative Simon Swig, who was so prominent in stirring up the bribery charges that resulted in the remarkable star chamber hearings on Beacon Hill, and who was mildly censured for "letting the cat out of the bag," in a message to the BOSTON AMERICAN, admits that he has a mileage book, but that he got it in exchange for advertising.

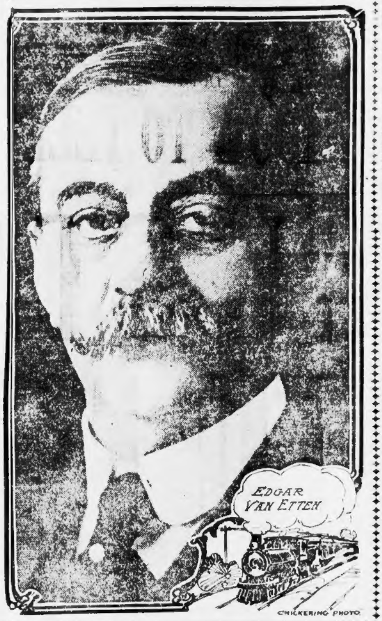
Swig Makes Statement.

"During the sessions of 1905 and 1906," said Mr. Swig, "I used and paid for commutation tickets."

A few of the other members of the Legislature hurried forward to declare that they have not used passes but have paid for their transportation. This is the law on the matter:

Section 234, Chapter 111: "Any person who, being Governor, Lieutenant-Governor, member of the council, member or member-elect of the General Court, justice of the Supreme Judicial Court, justice of the Superior Court, judge of the probate, justice of a police, district or municipal court, or a county commissioner, who requests, for himself or another, accepts or uses any free pass on a railroad, or any ticket which entitles him to transportation upon a railroad, for which he has paid a less price than is demanded of the public generally, and an officer, agent or employe of a railroad corporation who issues, delivers or offers to any person hereinbefore mentioned, or to or for any other person at the request, solicitation or procurement of any such person a free pass or any ticket which entitles him to transportation at a less rate of fare than is demanded of the public generally, shall be punished by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $1,000."

This Is the Man Who Says a Crime Is "Nobody's Business"



Edgar Van Etten is vice-president of the New York Central railroad and manager of the Boston & Albany railroad, which owns its share of the members of the present corrupt Legislature.

When a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter asked Mr. Van Etten what he had to say about the giving of railroad passes to members of the Legislature in violation of the law, Mr. Van Etten replied:

"It is nobody's business. I do not think the matter of sufficient importance to waste time talking about it."

It is a crime against the laws of Massachusetts for a member of the Legislature to accept a pass from a railroad. It is also a crime for a railroad official to offer or to give a pass to a member of the Legislature.

It is a fact that railway officials and members of the Legislature have secretly violated this law for years.

Fortunately the public has awakened to the nature of the forces which have enabled the railroads to control legislation in this State. Mr. Van Etten may, if he chooses, insult the citizens of the State by declaring that commission of crime is "nobody's business," but he cannot so easily shield the lawbreakers.

Do You Ride on Passes?

Question Asked All Legislators by the American.

The BOSTON AMERICAN last night sent out the following message by telegraph to every member of the Legislature:

Please wire at our expense whether or not you accept free transportation from the railroads. Your answer will be quoted exactly as received. Your failure to answer, of course, will be noted. This message is being sent to all members of the Legislature.

Most of the members replied promptly. Replies are still coming in. They will all be printed in to-morrow's SUNDAY AMERICAN.

IN DUEL OVER DREYFUS SECRETARY WOUNDED

PARIS, July 14.—Suffering from a sword thrust in the right breast that penetrated the lung, M. Sarraut, Under Secretary of State, lies in a serious condition to-day as a result of a duel last night with M. Pugliesi-Conti, over the restoring of Alfred Dreyfus to the army. The duel assumed the aspect of a veritable combat between the government and the opposition, as M. Sarraut's seconds were Ministers Clemenceau and Thomson, while M. Pugliesi-Conti's were M. Millevoye and General Jacquet, who were drawn from the elements which bitterly resist the government's rehabilitation of Dreyfus.

The meeting followed a fight on the floor of the Chamber of Deputies in which M. Sarraut sprang from beside Minister of the Interior Clemenceau, sitting on the ministerial benches, on M. Pugliesi-Conti, who had been heaping denunciations on the members of the government as scoundrels. Sarraut struck Pugliesi-Conti a stunning blow in the face. A scene of the wildest uproar ensued, compelling the suspension of the session. It was after the close of the session that the duel occurred.

Laws were enacted yesterday by the Chamber of Deputies reinstating Dreyfus, who obtains the rank of chief of squadron of artillery, and Picquart, who is made a brigadier general. Both houses were overwhelmingly favorable to Dreyfus and Picquart.

TRY TO DITCH B. & M. TRAIN

Nelson of this city, with his men, who were patrolling the track, discovered a rail on the outside of a curve in a dangerous place from which the spikes had nearly all been removed.

The rail was left in such a condition that the mail train would have been ditched had it struck it while running at the usual rate of speed.

AMERICAN TEACHERS AT HOME OF SHAKESPEARE

Special Cable to Boston American.

LONDON, July 14.—The BOSTON AMERICAN teachers are seeing the famous Warwick Castle and Shakespeare's home to-day. To-night they will be in London. They are twenty schoolteachers from Boston and New England who are touring Europe at the expense of HEARSTS' BOSTON AMERICAN.

The teachers arrived at Liverpool on the Arabic after an unusually safe and comfortable voyage. All are in good health and looking forward with keenest anticipation to the varied pleasures of their tour.

The teachers were soon ashore with the other tourists and proceeded first to Warwick, where the castle is located. After "doing" this medieval fortress, with its memories of the "days of old," the teachers went to Stratford-on-Avon.

There they were conducted to the home of Shakespeare, where it was planned to spend as much time as possible. This evening the teachers will proceed by rail to this city, where they will spend a few days.

Interesting places are crowding thick and fast upon the teachers. By the very nature of their profession they are well posted in history. Every community through which they pass, every castle they behold, holds something of historic interest to the travellers.

FACE ON BUTTON CONVICTS THIEF

Because he didn't notice the portrait of a girl on a button on the lapel of a coat he stole from the apartment of Jacob Udelson, Edward B. Crowley will spend a year on the island.

He took the coat, with the rest of the suit, to a second-hand store to pawn it. An inspector happened to stroll in and asked Crowley whose likeness the picture was. Crowley hadn't happened to notice the face and guessed the wrong sex. Then the inspector took him in and yesterday he was sentenced.

GIRL'S BODY IN LAKE; MURDER SUSPECT HELD

Autopsy Being Conducted in Big Moose Lake Crime Mystery.

GILLETTE UNDER ARREST

Special Cable to Boston American.

UTICA, July 14.—Chester Gillete of Cortland, accused of the murder of Miss Grace Brown at Big Moose Lake, has been taken by the police at Arrowhead, Fourth Lake. The clue casting suspicion upon him was given by the girl's father, Frank Brown, of South Otselic, who yesterday identified the girl's body, and told the police that she was last seen in the company of Gillete, and that they had been close acquaintances for the past six months.

Miss Brown and the man who accompanied her to the lake, registered at a hotel, he giving the name of Graham. On Wednesday they were seen on the lake together in a boat. Later the boat was found upside down, and after dragging the lake the girl's body was found.

On the shore was the hat of the man who had been with Miss Brown. The lining had been torn out and it was battered. The girl's body was found in a secluded part of the lake in a few feet of water. Shortly after the crime a young man was seen carrying a dress suit case, hatless and in a hurry. An autopsy being performed on the girl's body in a search for marks of violence, to support the theory of murder.

5 IN FAMILY SLAIN, TORCH TO THE BODIES

Awful Sight Greets Gaze of Two Daughters Aroused by Fire and Smoke.

CHARLOTTE, N. C., July 14.—The most heinous crime in the annals of the state was perpetrated last night by burglars at the home of Isaac Lyerly, a prominent planter and merchant living in Rowan county near Barber's Junction.

Two daughters sleeping in an upstairs room, awakened by smoke, rushed down stairs and were stricken speechless by the sight that met their eyes.

On a bed lay the corpses of their parents and scattered about on the floor were the bodies of two little girls and a boy, all cold in death with cruel marks on their heads and bodies where they had been beaten to death. The bed on which Lyerly and his wife lay was a mass of flames.

The fire was fortunately extinguished and the bodies of the five dead on the floor examined, but all were dead, having been killed supposedly thirty minutes before.

It is believed that the crime was the work of two negroes, one of whom worked for Lyerly up to a few days ago. He is alleged to have said, 'Lyerly may cut his wheat, but he will never live to eat the bread.'

The sheriff of the county was informed and came to the scene on a special train with bloodhounds and a posse and started in pursuit.

Lyerly was known to have money in the house, and robbery is believed to have been the motive of the crime. The burglars probably killed the family on account of some member giving an alarm.

SUICIDE FACES DEATH IN CHAIR

SOUTH HINGHAM, July 14.—Despondent over ill health, Charles Quincy Cushing rigged a hunting rifle to the fence in the rear of his barn to-day, and so arranged it that the trigger could be pulled by his foot. He then placed a chair in front of the rifle's muzzle, seated himself comfortably in it, removed all the clothing from the region of his heart, with the exception of his undershirt, and pulled the trigger.

Death was instantaneous, said the medical examiner.

Mr. Cushing was born in Boston, April 29, 1845. He is survived by his wife, a son and daughter.

CADETS BREAK HINGHAM CAMP

After "roughing it" for one week at Hingham, the First Corps of Cadets broke camp to-day, returning to Boston this afternoon. The only duty to-day was guard mount. This was followed by breakfast, and then the boys began packing. They marched to Hingham depot and boarded the 10:45 train. At Pemberton Landing they sailed for Boston on the Nantasket line steamers. On arrival in the city the Cadets marched through the business district to their armory on Columbus avenue.

WONDERLAND'S MOST FAMOUS INCUBATOR BABY POSES FOR PICTURE IN A PINT PITCHER

"Midget" Tesler Is Smallest Infant Ever Born Who Has Lived to Cry About It.

"I had a little husband, no larger than my thumb,
I put him in a pint pot and there I bade him drum."

Baby Helen Tesler, the wee-est mortal in the world, now contentedly living in a scrupulously clean incubator in Wonderland, has made the jingle of the Mother Goose Melodies a fact.

Helen was born into the world on June 11, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Tesler of Cambridge, and as quickly as he could carry her Dr. Shea of Massachusetts avenue, Cambridge, hurried her to Wonderland and into an incubator. Then "Midget" Tesler, as she is called, began to live.

She was easily persuaded to pose for a picture for the BOSTON AMERICAN, but the only receptacle that would contain her with ease and comfort was a pint pitcher. In this she had lots of room to squirm and kick around as she was photographed.

Is Growing Fast.

Helen weighed just twenty-four ounces on June 11. To-day, to show what pleasant Summer resorts incubators are for very wee babies, she weighs thirty-six ounces and is "putting on flesh," not rapidly, but just as fast as she should. She is the smallest mortal to ever get ahead in life and live, but had Dr. Shea not taken her to the incubator when he did she would have shared the fate of her twin sister and died in a few hours at the longest.

Helen is now a big eater for an incubator baby. She gets away with an ounce of milk at each of her nine meals daily. When she came to Wonderland she was not so self-determined and took but one-sixth of an ounce nine times a day.

Her mother and father are very proud of their tiny daughter and pay almost daily visits. There will be a rare family reunion in Cambridge in about six weeks from now, for at that time Helen will be graduated from the incubator and emerge into real babyhood.

Smallest Baby Ever.

Helen was without much doubt the smallest baby born into the world who has lived to cry about it. Why, when she came to the incubator at Wonderland her nurse used to slip her wedding ring clear over the morsel of a wrist and it passed easily up to the baby's shoulder. Now, the ring is too small to be slipped over Helen's hand. That shows that she has thrived.

When she was first born she could easily be covered by a man's hand or be placed in a pint preserving jar. The incubator babies at Wonderland are being developed not only to the end that they attain normal stature and physical strength, but that their mental faculties be expanded equally with those of children nurtured under natural conditions.

WATCH ENGLISH SHIPS FOR HOPE

Convinced that "Sir Beresford Hope, M. P.," wanted by Western officials on a charge of forgery, has made good his escape from this locality and probably from the country, the Boston police have practically given up the chase.

The fact that "Hope" remained in Newport but a few hours on Monday last and that he left there presumably for New York, leads the authorities to believe he then planned to make his escape from this country through some Canadian port.

Steps have been taken to have all vessels arriving at English ports closely watched.

BOSTON MAN TO RUN $1,000,000 MANILA HOTEL

Horace P. Dunbar is in Charge of Great Hostelry Project in the Philippines.

ONCE CHEF AT YOUNG'S

Horace P. Dunbar, the noted hotel man who started in as a chef in a Boston hotel, is in charge of an enterprise to build a million-dollar hotel at Manila. It is planned to make this hostelry the finest between this country and the famous Shepheard's in Cairo.

Horace P. Dunbar is a native of [illegible]. He came to Boston and began as chef at Young's. Then he rose to be steward of the Quincy House and later was steward at the Hotel Nantasket, Nantasket Beach.

In 1881 he went to Cincinnati and became steward at the Gibson House. In 1886 he was majority owner of the stock of the property.

He left Cincinnati and went to Seattle, where he was part owner in a big hotel. Litigation ensued between Dunbar and the other owners and Dunbar lost the suit.

Dispatches from Washington, D. C., to the BOSTON AMERICAN to-day give an announcement of the plans for the Manila hotel. The enterprise is backed by American and English capitalists. A site of 200,000 square feet has been purchased and construction will be begun soon. The property has a frontage of 700 feet on Washington boulevard and 500 feet on [illegible].

The hotel will be 350 feet long, with two big wings. The architecture will be Grecian up to the fourth floor, supporting a fifth floor roof garden. Steel and concrete will be used and it is asserted that the structure will be fire and earthquake proof.

POOR RICE CROP CAUSES FOOD RIOT IN CHINA

Now Seek Supply of American Flour in Spite of Boycott.

REPORT AT WASHINGTON

WASHINGTON, July 14.—Food riots have broken out among the natives in China, on account of the partial failure of the rice crop and the high prices at which this staple article of food is being held. Consul-General Rodgers of Shanghai touched upon this subject in his latest official communication to this government. He said that the price of rice had almost doubled, following the great floods in Hunan and other great rice growing provinces. Dealers, he added, have taken advantage of the scarcity and prospective short crop to add an abnormal profit.

The Chinese are turning to foreign foods for relief. Forgetful of the American boycott, they are reported to be buying American flour, and there is a certainty, it is said, of a greater consumption of this article.

RICH ENGLISHMAN'S SON TO REFORMATORY

MYSTERY IN DEATH OF SOLDIER BY STABBING

Suicide or murder, the police are unable to decide which in their investigation into the death by stabbing of Sergeant Samuel Sweitzer, of Fort Strong, at the home of Dennis McSweeney, No. 19 Washburn street, South Boston last night. Mrs. Elizabeth Bloom escaped from the man who was afterwards slain by leaping from one house to another. Her father is now in the City Hospital, a patient and a prisoner at the same time. An autopsy has been ordered.

Held as a witness, Mrs. Bloom, who was being beaten by Sweitzer shortly before he met his death, with her head tied in bandages and her arm in a sling, appeared in the South Boston court today, but Judge Fallon ordered her to be taken to the City Hospital. She had spent the night at City Point station after her injuries were dressed by Dr. Myers. She was hardly able to walk and an ambulance was summoned. At the hospital she was refused admittance.

Dennis McSweeney, at whose home the tragedy occurred, is lying at the point of death at the City Hospital, while the police are trying to discover whether it was his hand that struck home to Sweitzer's heart.

Mrs. Bloom was pursued through her home by Sweitzer with a large club, the man striking at her several times and threatening her life. Out onto the roof she dashed, 40 feet above the ground, with her assailant at her heels. At the edge she gathered all of her energies and boldly leaped across to the next house, that of Mr. and Mrs. John King, five feet away. The gap was 40 feet above the ground. Clearing the dizzy space, she fell fainting on the other side. To the fact that she is an old circus performer Mrs. Bloom to-day says she owes her life, for otherwise, she admits, she would never have had the courage to attempt the fearful leap.

McSweeney, who occupies the third floor tenement of the Washburn street house with his daughter, Mrs. Bloom, returned home shortly after 6 o'clock last night with Sweitzer, with whom he had been drinking during the afternoon.

The men went to McSweeney's room, and nothing was heard from them until about 8 o'clock, when Mrs. Bloom was attracted by the loud noise as though they were fighting. On going to the room she discovered Sweitzer beating her father over the head with a board.

She interfered and immediately, she says, the soldier turned on her and stuck her several times. With blood streaming from wounds on her face and head, Mrs. Bloom ran from the chamber to the kitchen, and to the veranda in the rear of the house, Sweitzer pursuing her.

Just what happened in the McSweeney tenement after Mrs. Bloom landed on the opposite veranda is a mystery. Switzer returned to the kitchen, and a loud noise was heard, as though the fight was resumed. Later the dead body of the soldier was found with a carving knife belonging to the McSweeneys lying close beside him.

It is claimed that McSweeney followed Sweitzer and Mrs. Bloom from the chamber, and that while the two were on the veranda he got the carving knife and then met Sweitzer as he returned from the veranda. Others believe that [illegible] killed himself.

Medical Examiner McDonald viewed the remains of Sweitzer and stated that the case bore the appearance of suicide. The knife had cut a large artery and the blood had spurted three or four feet.

"THAW HAD PLANNED MURDER FOR MONTHS," DECLARES GARVAN

Statement by District Attorney's Office Based on Testimony of 43 Witnesses.

defence, it is declared, will be insanity. Mr. Jerome says that he can't remember to have made the statement.

The remark of Mr. Jerome, which will undoubtedly be utilized by the defence in the interest of Thaw, was made by the District Attorney, it is said, in 1902, when he was approached by a lawyer who wished to bring an action against the young Pittsburg millionaire in behalf of Miss Ethel Thomas, who had been a friend of Thaw.

Thaw was made a defendant by Ethel Thomas, in January, 1902, in a suit for $20,000 damages for alleged injuries inflicted upon her by Thaw with a rawhide whip. The suit originally was brought by Senator Flynn of Alabama, a friend of Miss Thomas, but Lawyer Shay was substituted.

It was alleged that Miss Thomas, who was then 18, met Thaw while living at the Vendome and accepted an invitation to dine with him at No. 304 Fifth avenue, where he had a bachelor apartment.

LETTER INVITED HER.

With the complaint were two letters, said to be in Thaw's handwriting, and received by Miss Thomas at her hotel. One letter reads:

"Dear Ethel—I am sorry I was not here Friday. If you can, call at 304 Fifth avenue to-morrow (Tuesday). Please ring Bedford bell, or if the door is open, come to top door of the house; but come at just eleven o'clock. Won't you write here if you cannot come?

"Very sincerely (Signed) "H."

The other letter, which was received on a later day, is marked "Private." The text is:

"Dear Ethel—I am awfully sorry. It was 10 o'clock in the morning you were to come to me. Not 1 but 10. It was too bad. I thought you did not care for me so very much. Don't tell anyone, but do come, and care for me very much. I thank you. Kiss. Please send answer at once, care of Bedford, 304, but tell no one."

The District Attorney's office is informed that the Bedford referred to in the letters is William Bedford, for seven years Thaw's valet.

Miss Thomas, Lawyer Shay informed the District Attorney, alleges that she met Thaw in answer to a letter making an appointment, and that he invited her to visit his apartment in Fifth avenue. On the way he went into a store and bought a heavy rawhide whip.

"What do you want that whip for?" Miss Thomas asked.

"This is for a bad little girl like you," Thaw is said to have replied.

The Thomas girl thought he was joking. When she later tried to get out of the room, she alleges, Thaw beat her with the whip.

Miss Thomas alleges that she "was rendered sick, sore and disordered, sustained a severe shock to her nervous system, was compelled to remain in bed two days."

WOMAN WHOSE POSE ADORNS $2 BILLS IS CALLED TO TESTIFY

Special to the Boston American.

NEW YORK, July 14.—Assistant District-Attorney Garvan yesterday questioned another of the former friends of Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, Miss Rose Marston, who was an artist's model in New York, when Mrs. Thaw was also posing, and whose picture is on the silver certificates of 1896.

Before she took to the stage Miss Marston was famous in studios in this and other Eastern cities. It is her figure that adorns the $2 certificates of the series of 1896, she being the kneeling figure on the left of a group of five women on the face of the bills.

Edwin H. Blashfield, who was one of the artists of the Treasury Department at the time, saw Miss Marston, who had been "discovered" by Saro, and immediately decided to have her pose for his group on the silver certificates. Her figure was used also for the decorations in part of the Waldorf-Astoria and for the full symbolic figure of "Music" in the Congressional Library at Washington.

MOTHER CHEERS THAW BY WIRELESS

NEW YORK, July 14.—With the arrival of the Hamburg-American liner Kaiserin Augusta Victoria at Hoboken to-day there will be a change of dominating figures in the remarkable case of Harry Kendall Thaw, charged with killing Stanford White, and who is to be tried for murder in the first degree.

On that steamer is Mrs. William Thaw, the prisoner's mother, who was on the sea when the murder was committed, and who turned back to New York as soon as she learned of her son's trouble. It is expected she will decide the line of defence for her son.

Harry Thaw is this aged, gray-haired woman's son, and she has helped him out of scrapes ever since his boyhood. She gave up the Swiss baths, which her health needed, to direct the efforts which she hopes will lead him out of the most serious predicament of his life.

MESSAGE FROM MOTHER.

While still far off the coast yesterday, Mrs. Thaw sent her son a message of cheer by wireless, and it was delivered in his cell in the Tombs. Just what words she used could not be learned, but they comforted the rich young prisoner as nothing has since his arrest. Young Thaw's wife, it is said, sent back an answering message.

The Kaiserin has been in communication with the shore wireless stations since Thursday night and it is likely that she will get through quarantine by noon.

It is possible that the steamer will be delayed an hour or two, in which case Mrs. Thaw will not be able to see her son until Monday. Only a special permit will admit a visitor to the Tombs after the regular visiting hours or on Sunday. Commissioner of Corrections Lantry is out of the city and none of his subordinates have authority to issue these special permits.

MET BY RELATIVES.

Mrs. Thaw will be met at the pier only by relatives and intimate friends from Pittsburg. Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, the prisoner's wife, desires to be the first to greet her, but last night this had not been decided. She may wait at her apartments in the Lorraine.

Judge W. M. K. Olcott, chief of counsel in Thaw's defence, will not meet the steamer, as he never has met Mrs. Thaw. He will be at his office all day and expects to have a conference with the prisoner's mother soon after she lands.

It is generally believed that the line of Thaw's defence will be decided definitely at this conference, though for strategic reasons it may not be made public for several days.

Mrs. Thaw has always succeeded in untying the tangles her sons and daughters made in their lives, and so far has been successful.

"THE JUNGLE"

Fight Like Beasts for Station House Shelter

THROWN OUT OF WORK BY THOUSANDS, MEN IN MISERY STARVE AND FREEZE.

Copyright, 1906, by Upton Sinclair. All rights reserved. Published by courtesy of Doubleday, Page & Co.

According to an unwritten law, the buying of a drink included the privilege of loafing for just so long; then one had to buy another drink or move on. That Jurgis was an old customer entitled him to a somewhat longer stop; but then he had been away two weeks, and was evidently "on the bum."

He might plead and tell his "hard luck story," but that would not help him much; a saloonkeeper who was to be moved by such means would soon have his place jammed to the doors with "hoboes" on a day like this.

Among "Hoboes"

So Jurgis went out into another place, and paid another nickel. He was so hungry this time that he could not resist the hot beef stew, an indulgence which cut short his stay by a considerable time.

When he was again told to move on, he made his way to a "tough" place in the "Levee" district, where now and then he had gone with a certain rat-eyed Bohemian workingman of his acquaintance, seeking a woman.

It was Jurgis's vain hope that here the proprietor would let him remain as a "sitter." In low-class places, in the dead of Winter, saloonkeepers would often allow one or two forlorn-looking bums who came in covered with snow or soaked with rain to sit by the fire and look miserable to attract custom. A workingman would come in, feeling cheerful after his day's work was over, and it would trouble him to have to take his glass with such a sight under his nose; and so he would call out:

"Hello, Bub, what's the matter? You look as if you'd been up against it!"

And then the other would begin to pour out some tale of misery, and the man would say, "Come have a glass, and maybe that'll brace you up."

And so they would drink together, and if the tramp was sufficiently wretched-looking, or good enough at the "gab," they might have two; and if they were to discover that they were from the same country, or had lived in the same city or worked at the same trade, they might sit down at a table and spend an hour or two in talk—and before they got through the saloonkeeper would have taken in a dollar.

All of this might seem diabolical, but the saloonkeeper was in no wise to blame for it. He was in the same plight as the manufacturer who has to adulterate and misrepresent his product.

If he does not, some one else will; and the saloonkeeper, unless he is also an alderman, is apt to be in debt to the big brewers, and on the verge of being sold out.

The market for "sitters" was glutted that afternoon, however, and there was no place for Jurgis. In all he had to spend six nickels in keeping a shelter over him that frightful day, and then it was just dark, and the station houses would not open until midnight!

At the last place, however, there was a bartender who knew him and liked him, and let him doze at one of the tables until the boss came back; and also, as he was going out, the man gave him a tip—on the next block there was a religious revival of some sort, with preaching and singing, and hundreds of hoboes would go there for the shelter and warmth.

All But Frozen.

Jurgis went straightway and saw a sign hung out, saying that the door would open at seven-thirty; then he walked, or half ran, a block, and hid awhile in a doorway and then ran again, and so on until the hour.

At the end he was all but frozen and fought his way in with the rest of the throng (at the risk of having his arm broken again), and got close to the big stove.

By eight o'clock the place was so crowded that the speakers ought to have been flattered; the aisles were filled halfway up, and at the door men were packed tight enough to walk upon. There were three elderly gentlemen in black upon the platform, and a young lady who played the piano in front.

First they sang a hymn, and then one of the three, a tall, smooth-shaven man, very thin, and wearing black spectacles, began an address. Jurgis heard snatches of it, for the reason that terror kept him awake—he knew that he snored abominably, and to have been put out just then would have been like a sentence of death to him.

The evangelist was preaching "sin and redemption," the infinite grace of God and His pardon for human frailty. He was very much in earnest, and he meant well, but Jurgis, as he listened, found his soul filled with hatred.

What did he know about sin and suffering—with his smooth, black coat and his neatly starched collar, his body warm and his belly full, and money in his pocket—and lecturing men who were struggling for their lives, men at the death-grapple with the demon powers of hunger and cold! This, of course, was unfair; but Jurgis felt that these men were out of touch with the life they discussed, that they were unfitted to solve its problems; nay, they themselves were part of the problem—they were part of the order established that was crushing men down and beating them!

They were of the triumphant and insolent possessors; they had a hall, and a fire, and food and clothing and money, and so they might preach to hungry men, and the hungry men must be humble and listen!

They were trying to save their souls—and who but a fool could fail to see that all that was the matter with their souls was that they had not been able to get a decent existence for their bodies?

Near to Death

At 11 the meeting closed and the desolate audience filed out into the snow, muttering curses upon the few traitors who had got repentance and gone upon the platform. It was yet an hour before the station house would open, and Jurgis had no overcoat—and was weak from a long illness.

During that hour he nearly perished. He was obliged to run hard to keep his blood moving at all—and then he came back to the station house and found a crowd blocking the street before the door!

This was in the month of January, 1904, when the country was on the verge of "hard times," and the newspapers were reporting the shutting down of factories every day—it was estimated that a million and a half of men were thrown out of work before the Spring.

So all the hiding places of the city were crowded, and before that station house door men fought and tore each other like savage beasts. When at last the place was jammed and they shut the doors half the crowd was still outside; and Jurgis, with his helpless arm, was among them.

There was no choice then but to go to a lodging house and spend another dime. It really broke his heart to do this, at 12:30 o'clock, after he had wasted the night at the meeting and on the street.

He would be turned out of the lodging house promptly at 7—they had the shelves which served as bunks so contrived that they could be dropped, and any man who was slow about obeying orders could be tumbled to the floor.

Begs for His Life

This was one day, and the cold spell lasted for fourteen of them. At the end of six days every cent of Jurgis's money was gone; and then he went out on the streets to beg for his life.

He would begin as soon as the business of the city was moving. He would sally forth from a saloon, and, after making sure there was no policeman in sight, would approach every likely-looking person who passed him, telling his woeful story and pleading for a nickel or dime.

Then when he got one he would dart around the corner and return to his base to get warm; and his victim, seeing him do this, would go away, vowing that he would never give a cent to a beggar again. The victim never paused to ask where else Jurgis could have gone under the circumstances—where he, the victim, would have gone.

At the saloon Jurgis could not only get more food and better food than he could buy in a restaurant for the same money, but a drink in the bargain to warm him up. Also he could find a comfortable seat by a fire and could chat with a companion until he was as warm as toast.

At the saloon, too, he felt at home. Part of the saloonkeeper's business was to offer a home and refreshments to beggars in exchange for the proceeds of their foragings; and was there any one else in the whole city who would do this—would the victim have done it himself?

Blundering Amateur.

Poor Jurgis might have been expected to make a successful beggar. He was just out of the hospital, and desperately sick-looking, and with a helpless arm; also he had no overcoat, and shivered pitifully. But, alas, it was again the case of the honest merchant, who finds that the genuine and unadulterated article is driven to the wall by the artistic counterfeit.

Jurgis, as a beggar, was simply a blundering amateur in competition with organized and scientific professionalism. He was just out of the hospital—but the story was worn threadbare, and how could he prove it? He had his arm in a sling—and it was a device a regular beggar's little boy would have scorned.

He was pale and shivering—but they were made up with cosmetics, and had studied the art of chattering their teeth. As to his being without an overcoat, among them you would meet men you could swear had on nothing but a ragged linen duster and a pair of cotton trousers—so cleverly had they concealed the several suits of all-wool underwear beneath.

Many of these professional mendicants had comfortable homes, and families, and thousands of dollars in the bank; some of them had retired upon their earnings and gone into the business of fitting out and doctoring others, or working children at the trade.

There were some who had both their arms bound tightly to their sides, and padded stumps in their sleeves, and a sick child hired to carry a cup for them. There were some who had no legs and pushed themselves upon a wheeled platform—some who had been favored with blindness and were led by pretty little dogs.

Some less fortunate had mutilated themselves or burned themselves, or had brought horrible sores upon themselves with chemicals; you might suddenly encounter upon the street a man holding out to you a finger rotting and discolored with gangrene—or one with livid scarlet wounds half escaped from their filthy bandages.

These desperate ones were the dregs of the city's cesspools, wretches who hid at night in the rain-soaked cellars of old ramshackle tenements, in "stale-beer dives" and opium joints, with abandoned women in the last stages of the harlot's progress—women who had been kept by Chinamen and turned away at last to die.

Every day the police net would drag hundreds of them off the streets, and in the Detention Hospital you might see them, herded together in a miniature inferno, with hideous, beastly faces, bloated and leprous with disease, laughing, shouting, screaming in all stages of drunkenness, barking like dogs, gibbering like apes, raving and tearing themselves in delirium.

SEEK GRASS TWINE CASH

NEW YORK, July 14.—In the belief that they can force Darius O. Mills and former directors of the American Grass Twine Company to restore to them money paid for shares in that corporation, several stockholders have advertised for others to join them and confer on ways and means.

They bought grass twin shares at prices ranging between $30 and $62 a share. The quotations now are $8.50 to $9.50 a share. When they bought the stock they allege that Mills and his co-directors had created a fictitious value for it.

NEW ENGLAND ELKS ON WAY TO DENVER

WHITE RIVER JUNCTION, Vt., July 14.—Nearly 200 Elks from twenty-five New England Lodges passed through here from Boston yesterday on an excursion to Denver. There were twenty-five women in the party. Charles A. Kelly was in charge. Fourteen pullmans and sleepers compose the train.

MOTOR CYCLIST FACED DEATH IN A RUNAWAY

Cycle Rushing Madly Around Board Track Leaps Twelve Feet in Air.

CONTROLLER WAS BROKEN

A runaway motor cycle running at the rate of forty miles an hour carried Otis P. Phillips, an expert cyclist, for fifteen minutes careering around the inside of his eight-foot "cycle whirl" board track in Stick's amusement hall, East Boston, last night and finally sent him up the sides of the track and over the top of the track twelve feet into the air. Phillips and the machine toppled over to the floor below, where Phillips was saved from severe injuries and entanglement with his machine by being caught by Charles Hanson, a friend of the rider.

Phillips' injuries were dressed by Dr. Frederick S. Kingsley of Columbus avenue, who found that besides minor cuts and bruises the cyclist was suffering from a severe injury to the ankle bones.

Phillips and Will Stinson, the cyclist, have been practicing for some weeks preparatory to giving a "cycle whirl" act inside of a tiny board track at Wonderland. Stinson rides a bicycle following pace set by Phillips on a motor cycle.

During the practice try-out last night, when both men were making about eighteen miles an hour, the controller of the motor cycle broke, and the speed of the machine increased suddenly to about forty miles an hour. Phillips pulled away violently on the handlebar brake of the controller, but without any result. Stinson was busy dodging the runaway machine.

Finally, after it had gone around the track for fifteen minutes, with a great spurt, the motor cycle dashed to the top of the small board track, and carried its rider over the top of the inclosure and in to the air.

BABE DYING OF FALL, MOTHER BLAMES SELF

Lad Dashed Three Stories to Street—Parent Raves; "I Am Murderess!"

With half a dozen ugly gashes about his body, two-year-old Albert Stoltz of No. 646 Harrison avenue is dying to-day at the City Hospital. In the same building his mother, in a condition of nervous prostration, is raving that she is her boy's murderess.

Within an hour yesterday the ambulance twice visited the tenement at No. 646 Harrison avenue. On its first trip it carried away the mangled form of the baby who had plunged to the street from a third-story window. On its second visit the mother was carried into the vehicle, unconscious.

Little Albert Stoltz was playing about the family rooms on the third floor of the tenement while his mother was at work in the kitchen. One of the front windows overlooking the street was open. Evidently attracted by a sound below, the lad clambered onto the sill. A sudden scream brought Mrs. Stoltz rushing from the rear rooms. Peering over too far from his lofty perch, the little fellow had lost his balance and was plunging toward the pavement far below almost before the cry had left his throat.

Beneath on the street the frantic mother saw the huddled form of her child. Screaming, she rushed through the building to his side. The lad was unconscious when she reached him.

Catching up his form in her arms, Mrs. Stoltz was dashing back into the building when she sank to the walk, unconscious, with her boy's body still tightly clutched in her arms.

It was the fear that her husband, who is at work at Campello, would blame her for the boy's fall that was her first thought when she was brought back to consciousness.

"He will blame me!" she moaned. "I will be called my child's murderess because I didn't keep a better watch on him!"

Her raving became so violent that finally the ambulance was again summoned. She fainted a second time before it arrived.

SLAYER ENDS LIFE BY POISON

By Boston American Leased Wire.

CHICAGO, July 14.—Ralph Le Isle, convicted yesterday of the murder of Samuel Goldberg, a saloon keeper, and sentenced to life imprisonment, was found dead in his cell in the county jail early to-day. Yesterday afternoon he bid his wife good-bye.

The death followed a fixed determination of Le Isle to cheat the cell in case he should be sentenced to life imprisonment. He had obtained poison by some means and ended his life during the night.

DROPS MATCH; BLAST EXPLODES; 6 HURT

FITCHBURG, July 14.—Jacob Ahola and five of his fellow workmen, employed by the Fitchburg Granite Company, had a remarkable escape from death yesterday. While Ahola was lighting a fuse to explode some blasting powder in a granite crevice he threw the match down hard and it ignited powder in the can.

SAY ALL PARTIES ARE FOR MORAN IN CHELSEA

DECLARE HE WILL CARRY THE CAUCUSES UNANIMOUSLY AND WILL SWEEP STATE.

Prominent Democratic and Republican politicians of Chelsea freely predict that John B. Moran, if he should be the Democratic candidate for Governor, would carry the city by a far bigger plurality than ex-Gov. William L. Douglas did two years ago.

Marcus M. Merritt, former Representative; Dennis H. Tirrell, chairman of the Democratic city committee; ex-Alderman Joseph H. Gill and Albert L. Morse, prominent Republican and former member of the Chelsea Common Council, are among those who declare that Moran would sweep the city.

"If nothing intervenes within the next two months to injure Moran's popularity he will carry the Chelsea caucuses unanimously. I believe he would not only sweep the city at election time but the State as well.

"I told Arthur Lyman, chairman of the executive committee of the Democratic State Committee, five weeks ago, when he was over here, that it would be useless to oppose Moran in the Chelsea caucuses because he will carry them in spite of all opposition. The Democratic State Committee leaders should withdraw their opposition to Moran and, recognizing the inevitable, indorse him at once. They should get together with Moran immediately and agree upon a platform. That is the only thing left for them to do, and I have told them as much.

"Will Get Republican Votes."

"There is a strong Republican sentiment here for Moran. While, of course, some Republicans favorable to him will not openly say so, I know he will secure many Republican votes on election day. He will carry this city by a larger vote than he did for district attorney, when he beat Sughrue here by 600, and will make Douglas's majority of 500 over Bates for Governor look small."

This statement from Mr. Merritt, coming as it does from a man who has always been identified with the conservative wing of the party, will surprise the friends of Moran and would surprise the other side if it was not for the fact that Chairman Lyman found out Mr. Merritt's sentiments when he was over here gunning in the political field. For years Mr. Merritt has been associated with the element of the party that has been dominated by the influence of Colonel William A. Gaston. His announcement will be of particular encouragement to the old line Democrats who have hesitated about coming out for Moran. Besides having been a member of the Legislature for three years, Mr. Merritt was a member of the Chelsea Board of Aldermen, of the Democratic State committee and the nominee of the party for Mayor in 1904-5. He led the fight to have stricken from the statute books the law making the payment of a poll tax a prerequisite of voting.

"Nothing but Moran."

Albert L. Morse, Republican, says: "While everyone here knows that I have always been a Republican, I am a Moran man from A to Z. I did not vote for him for District Attorney, but I shall for Governor, as will hundreds of Chelsea Republicans. The efforts of the present Republican State administration to hamper him in his duties as District Attorney have disgusted all fair-minded Republicans. Moran will carry Chelsea by a bigger majority than Douglas did. It will be a landslide."

Mr. Morse says he could give the names of many Chelsea Republicans who believe as he does and will vote for Moran. He believes the same feeling prevails among Republicans all over the State.

Chairman Dennis H. Tirrell of the Democratic city committee says: "There is nothing but Moran sentiment in Chelsea and it will be useless for the State machine leaders to try to defeat him."

Ex-Alderman Joseph H. Gill says: "John B. Moran can defeat all the Curtis Guilds they ever put up. He will have a solid delegation to the State convention from this city and will carry the city at election time by 1500. Moran will sweep the State. The reform wave that has been sweeping over the country has struck Massachusetts and it is going to land Moran in the Governor's chair."

BIG DEMOCRATS HANDLE MORAN WITH GREAT CARE

Thayer in a Quandary at Ward 20's Festival at Squantum To-day; Republican Bosses in Blue Funk.

Down among the chickens and the clams at Squantum the "Red Devil Democracy" of Ward 20 is disporting itself to-day. The annual love feast and gab fest of the hustling organization, which has for its prime object the overthrowing of Congressman "Bill" McNary, is being personally conducted by Joseph F. O'Connell, big chief of the club, and hunter for the McNary shoes.

The exercises are taking place at the famous Inn and ex-Congressman John R. Thayer of Worcester, Chairman Josiah Quincy of the Democratic State Committee, and General Charles W. Bartlett, last year's candidate for Governor, are billed as the star performers.

Ex-Governor Douglas and Mayor Fitzgerald sent word that they could not attend because of previous engagements.

Wouldn't Aid Any Boom.

Before accepting his invitation, Mr. Thayer inquired of the club managers if the affair was to be a game of booming, and served notice that if it was to be he would not attend, as he was well able to arrange affairs to suit himself. He was assured that no one was to be boomed and that he would be all kinds of free lance if he so desired. With that understanding he accepted the invitation.

It is understood that Mr. Thayer has been contemplating an attack on John B. Moran's candidacy, to be made at Squantum. He has said that he "objects to having the Democratic party become the tail of the Moran Prohibition kite."

Mr. Thayer's friends have been advising him that he should let some one else make the effort to stem the rising Moran tide, and not butt his head against a stone wall. Mr. Thayer is standing between what he considers duty and policy, and he says he is afraid his impulse to speak out will get the better of policy.

It is not the purpose of General Bartlett to make an attack on Moran. "None of it in mine," is what he has told the big bosses.

Quincy Hears from Moran.

Quincy has had a heart-to-heart talk with Moran and has come to the conclusion that the wisest thing for his crowd to do is to let Moran have the regular nomination and finance his own campaign. The Quincy-Gaston element could then go fishing during the campaign, taking no interest in anything but the election of the State committee.

Moran told Quincy that he expected to be opposed by the machine, but was going to run in spite of it and in the manner he pleased. He emphatically told Chairman Quincy that he could do as he pleased about the nomination and that he, Moran, would do the same thing.

Friends of Colonel Gaston are circulating the story that he will send out a statement next week on the gubernatorial situation and that he will not attack the Moran candidacy. From the persistency with which the story is being repeated the impression has gone abroad that the leaders of the State committee are ready to throw up their hands and let Moran walk away with the nomination.

Guild Must Prepare to Fight.

The Moran boom has scared the Republican politicians. They are calling for a meeting of the State Committee, and it is expected that one will be held next week to discuss matters. Lieutenant-Governor Draper is already alarmed, and has been working hard for some time to allay the Republican unrest. A demand has gone out that Governor Guild must get himself in shape for a grueling campaign against Moran. The following is a sample of the way the badly demoralized Republican workers, who are out among the voters, are talking. It is from one of the most prominent of the working members of the State Committee:

"It will not do to run this campaign in the slipshod way that some off-year elections have been handled. I have no question, if the campaign is run as it should be, that Governor Guild can outstrip Moran, but the Governor's opponent is a dangerous man and should be recognized as such at the start. It will take thorough organization all through the State, as I view it, for us to win out, and the sooner we get to work the better. It will need plenty of the sinews of war, too. There is no question of the unrest among the people. It's got to be a hot campaign, and the Governor has got to go into it himself and fight it hard. That is the way I look at it."

HAD DYNAMITE TO START BOOM

BANGOR, Me., July 14.—Patrick Dugan walked into the Elm House last evening with a box of dynamite and told the guests he would show them how to start a boom. He gave his box of explosives a playful shake, and the proprietor of the hotel ran for a policeman, who chased Dugan into the street, where he was captured.

Dugan's record was looked up. It proved that he was a graduate of the Eastern Maine Insane Hospital, and that his post-graduate work has been of a nature to qualify him for a course in a gold-cure institution.

MRS. LESLIE CARTER, "30," BRIDE OF 33-YEAR-OLD "STUDENT" IN WEDDING OF MYSTERY

"ZAZA" TOLD RECTOR IT WAS FIRST MARRIAGE

Actress in Portsmouth Ceremony Still Refuses to Admit She Has Wed.

WAS DIVORCED IN 1890

here last evening after the marriage, bound, it is said, for Mr. Courtney's Summer home, "The Ranch," at Athol, Mass. It is said that Mr. and Mrs. Payne will join them there some time to-day.

"Looked Like An Actress."

The Rev. Henry Emerson, pastor of St. John's Episcopal Church at Portsmouth, who married the couple, over the telephone to-day, said to a reporter of the BOSTON AMERICAN:

"The couple came to the chapel yesterday about 11 o'clock and asked to be married. They showed me their license and it was alright. I did not know either of them. The woman was stylishly dressed and might have been an actress. Now, that you mention it, I should say that she gave me that impression.

"The couple came along. While I could not say that they were perfectly cool there was no perceptible agitation. The woman wore a veil. I could say whether she had red hair or not. I did not notice that. She told me that she was thirty years old and that her name was Dudley. My two daughters acted as witnesses.

"In the license she made the declaration that she had not been married before. I asked the same question, as I usually do. It was the man, I believe, who replied that she had not been married before. I haven't the least idea as to whether she was Mrs. Leslie Carter, the actress, or not."

LATE PHOTOGRAPH OF MRS. LESLIE CARTER; ACTRESS ENTERING AUTO AND HER SIGNATURE

Ocean View Hotel employes at Winthrop where Mrs. Leslie Carter and a number of her party spent half an hour last night, do not believe that the actress has been married.

If such was the case, they declare, the secret was carefully guarded by all of her party. No reference whatever to such an event was made in the hearing of any one in the hotel and in the language of one of the employes, "Neither Mrs. Carter nor Mr. Payne, both of whom were present, was regarded as though anything out of the ordinary had occurred."

Every effort is being made to guard the details of the marriage, and an answer is persistently refused to all questions by any of the tourists. The party were assigned "Suite 534," and as this consists of eight rooms, it was impossible to learn whether the two are registered as man and wife or not.

Mr. Payne denied point blank to Boston reporters the report of his marriage for several hours. He stated that he had only known Mrs. Carter a short time.

When told that copies of the marriage license had been obtained, he refused to talk further and walked away.

With Mrs. Carter when she arived at the Touraine were her son, Dudley Carter, Miss Norma Munro; her manager, Tunis F. Deane, Messers. Courtney, Cowan, Acton Davies, W. L. Payne and Mr. Devereut. Two autos loaded with baggage accompanied them. Two chauffeurs, a valet, footman and three maids arrived ahead of the party by train.

The automobiles were at once taken to a garage. The license which was used for the Portsmouth ceremony was obtained by Mr. Payne, and gave Mrs. Carter's maiden name, Caroline Louise Dudley, and the age of the actress as thirty. It stated that she had not been married before.

As a matter of fact Mrs. Carter has been married before, to Leslie Carter of Chicago, from whom she was divorced December 16, 1890. She has a son, Dudley by this marriage, who is now twenty-three years of age. These details consequently render the detail of her age absurd. Why these statements were made in the marriage license is a point upon which as yet no light has been thrown.

Before starting not a word was mentioned about the wedding at the hotel, and they were undecided as to where they should make their next stopping place. It lay between Gloucester and Winthrop, Mass., and Mrs. Carter finally said, "You people go ahead and we will trail," meaning her husband and herself.

Rev. Mr. Hovey did not know until after they had left that he had married Mrs. Carter. He said last night that he did not suspect she had been married before, and that was why he had inquired if it was her first marriage, for he does not marry divorced people.

Mr. Payne gave his occupation as that of a student, his age as thirty-three and his residence as New York. For several years, however, he has managed a stock company at Albany, N. Y., and has been on the stage himself, appearing in "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots."

ROGERS LEAVES MUTUAL TICKET

NEW YORK, July 14.—Henry H. Rogers will not appear in the administration ticket of the Mutual Life Insurance Company to be voted on by the policy-holders December 8.

It is understood that he decided to eliminate himself and not put in peril the success of the whole ticket by putting his name on it. The nominations will not be formally announced until Monday at the special meeting of trustees, who will ratify them.

HAD LONG, HARD FALL FROM HIS HAMMOCK

Daniel Stellman, of Roxbury, went happily to sleep Thursday night in a hammock swung on the clothes reel of his roof. He woke up yesterday to find that during the night, in turning over to find the easiest side of the hammock, he had fallen out, down two flights of stairs and broken his shoulder blade. He was told what happened to him by the neighbors, who ran in when they heard the descent. He was sent to the City Hospital.

WARRANT FOR WATSON, POSTAL FRAUD CHARGE

Armed with a warrant charging him with using the United States mails in furtherance of a scheme to defraud, post-office inspectors are searching to-day for Treasurer George Watson of the National Securities company, which formerly did business at No. 110 State street, and through which it is charged patrons lost several thousand dollars.

At Watson's home at Winthrop Highlands to-day it was stated to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter that Mr. Watson was in New York on a business trip and was expected back to-night. His office at No. 110 State street is closed, the pretty stenographer who had held down the desk since Watson disappeared Wednesday, not being there to-day. The United States authorities are on the look-out for Watson, watching all trains, and are also keeping a guard over his house at Winthrop.

Assistant United States District Attorney Garland said to-day that he had little hope of catching Watson, the publicity given the case by M. J. Butler of Brooklyn, who started the investigation, having warned Watson that he was wanted.

The business of the National Securities Company was the guaranteeing of bonds of corporations, the scheme being for the securities company to charge a corporation a sum of money for guaranteeing its bonds, the company purporting to secure the underwriting of the securities. Butler says he paid the company $250 to guarantee the bonds of the Butler Chemical Company of Brooklyn, but so far as he can find out they never made an attempt to sell a bond of the company.

Postoffice Inspector William B. Snow, who is doing the probing, says that Butler is not the only one who has been caught.

We Have No Right to Publish the Letter Which Follows. It May Offend the Writer; It May Offend You.

Many a beautiful thing has been ruined by crude handling. On the other hand, many a beautiful thing has been lost because of an over-nice discrimination.

We justify ourselves to the writer of this letter by our assurances that its publication will bring immeasurable good to her cause, we justify ourselves to you because any act of ours that will lead you to read the wonderful story of Sophie Wright in our July number carries its own justification, we justify ourselves to ourselves because the story indicates our real attitude toward our fellow-humans.

It is hardly necessary to remind you that we have given a great deal of space in our magazine to stories of wickedness and wretchedness and wrong. You may be sure that we have not called a lot of our fellow-mortals out of their names because we enjoy doing so. We have run our articles on "Frenzied Finance," and the Beef Trust, and the Private Freight Car Monopoly and Insurance and Bucket Shops and all the rest, because we felt that the people of this country were entitled to know how bad some things really were at bottom, because until the people really did know there could be no hope for improvement.

We want you to read this letter, and we want you to read the article in the July Everybody's about Sophie Wright for the sake of her cause, for the sake of all good efforts everywhere for the uplifting of humanity, and for our sakes, too, lest possibly you may have failed to catch the real spirit of hopefulness and optimism and helpfulness inspiring Everybody's Magazine.

EVERYBODY'S MAGAZINE,
NEW YORK, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

The copy of Everybody's Magazine has just reached me and I have read the article by Mr. Matthews with great interest.

I hardly know what to say for I realize what this article means for "my boys" and that, of course, is a great happiness.

I realize what this means; for to have so much space given to a work and in a magazine as well known as yours, is a compliment that I appreciate deeply.

I know that my letter of thanks seems weak to you, but I am so deeply touched by what has been written and so much affected that I cannot find words to express my gratitude.

But I do thank you in the name of "my boys" and I am sure that the good that has been accomplished by your magazine will live forever.

You have been fearless in the truth, strong in your purpose and loyal in your convictions and the world will be better for this, and for all this, I say thank God for your magazine which stands for truth, no matter what it costs.

Again thanking you in the name of "my boys" and with expressions of deep gratitude, believe me to be,

Yours sincerely,
SOPHIE B. WRIGHT.

WAGE EARNERS ORGANIZE TO COMBAT PUBLIC EVILS

Form Central Club to Aid Candidates Who Will Favor Legislation Indorsed by Workers.

With the adoption of a constitution and platform of principles, the Wage Earners' Central Club of Boston got down to a working basis at a large and enthusiastic meeting last night in Blatchford Hall, Wells Memorial Building.

Provisions are made to combat conspicuous current evils, such as bribery of lawmakers, corrupt influences of steam and electric railroads and railways and electric lighting corporations, government by injunction and criminal and oppressive trusts. The platform also declares, among other things, for public ownership of natural monopolies and the initiative and referendum.

To support candidates for public office who will agree to favor legislation indorsed by wage earners, is the intent of the constitution in a nut-shell.

Branches of the club are to be organized in each of the twenty-five wards of the city. The following were appointed members of the executive committee, with officers of the club:

Ward 1, W. S. Harvey; 2, J. J. McLaughlin; 3, James H. Haley; 4, John O'Hare; 6, Dominick D'Alessandro; 7, Richard J. McCoy; 8, W. H. Cushing; 9, Dennis D. Driscoll; 10, M. Mahon; 11, L. W. E. Kimball; 12, Harry Noble; 13, F. A. Cox; 14, J. Frank O'Hare; 15, John T. Cashman; 16, Martin T. Joyce; 17, Edward Ryan; 18, Charles E. O'Donnell; 19, W. H. Courser; 20, Martin T. Mattimoe; 21, P. R. Kiekhan; 22, Jeremiah F. Donovan; 23, A. L. Leeman; 25, J. J. Donovan. Branches have already been started in Wards 18 and 22.

GUILD GOING WHERE HE CAN SMELL PINES

Governor Curtis Guild is to take a month's vacation, but he will not divulge the location of the place he will visit.

"I want rest and quiet, and intend to get it," said the Governor to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter. "I will leave Boston early in August and remain away one month."

"Where am I going? Well, that is a secret, and I intend to keep it so, for I do not wish to be badgered while away. I'll tell you this much, however—I am going to a place up in the woods, where I can lay in a hammock and smell the perfume of the pines. For recreation I will do a little fishing. What I need most, however, is solitude, which means rest and quiet. It will be the simple life for me this Summer."

Governor Guild further stated that he will spend the next week at Nahant and will not visit the State House during that period.

TEACH GRAFT IN SCHOOL, HE SAYS

LOUISVILLE, July 14.—Graft as a course in the schools of the country was advocated by ex-Governor Bradley in an address yesterday before the teachers of Jefferson County. He wanted the subject taught in the schools so that the rising generation will know what it is and how to avoid it.

Denouncing graft as a deadly curse of the United States, he said it was necessary that something be done to check it, and he believed the public schools to be the best place.

GAME AT NEWTON CENTRE.

There will be a fast game at Newton Centre to-day. The Boston Blues play the strong Newton Upper Falls at 3:30 p. m. Cushing and Simpson, the home battery, will try their best to stop speedy Bastable and Delaney, a coming Roxbury catcher of the Blues.

CAPT. COLLINS RESTING; NOT DANGEROUSLY ILL

Local baseball fans were astounded today to hear that Jimmy Collins, manager-captain of the Boston American team, was dangerously ill, and was threatened with nervous prostration. The reports, however, are much overdrawn.

For a week he has been in seclusion, and the management announced that he was on the track of some good material for the team, which has been making a poor showing ever since the season opened.

Yesterday the management learned the whereabouts of Collins, and located him not many miles from the Hub. He is not suffering from any severe malady, but is getting a rest, as he has been under a severe strain because of the criticism he has been obliged to take for the miserable showing of his team.

Collins is of peculiar temperament and the reverses of the Boston team have effected him to the extent that his health was in danger of being broken down.

He has assumed the entire burden of the team's welfare on his shoulders, and found it a heavy job when many setbacks followed one upon another.

As a result, he took it upon himself to take the best course for himself, and decided to get away from the baseball centre for a while and then prepare for action.

About a week ago while practising with the team he injured his strained knee which was the final stroke of his misery, and it was immediately that he disappeared, saying that he was going in search of new timber for the team. At least that was the statement as given out by the management.

President Ban Johnson is expected here on Monday, and he will have a conference with Collins on the conditions of things, and some new feature may develop in the future of the team.

HUNTINGTON AVENUE GROUNDS, Boston, July 14.—Still very much alive, the Hub remnants got into action with the Browns for the third game of the series, determined to put up a stiff fight to stem the Westerners in their mad flight for victories.

The fans knew how a team will struggle when cornered, as the conditions were very much like that for the home aggregation, and descended upon the stands in bunches to be in at the finish.

The Browns ruled favorites, but the small enders stuck it out that there would be an upset, especially with Cy Young occupying the centre of the stage, and the big fellow never instilled more confidence.

The war mweather was just the kind he liked, and he boiled out furiously for a heavy test of his prowess.

All he wanted was some substantial stick work to help hi mout and he could take care of his end of the meeting.

McAleer had both Glade and Howell exercising, and the former was acting so well that it was not surprising that he got the one to face Uncle Cyrus.

DANDELION WILL BE THE FAVORITE

NEW YORK, July 14.—The Brighton Handicap, the most valuable of the turf "classics," will be decided to-day at the track by the sea. It is worth $25,000—$5,000 more than either the Brooklyn or the Suburban.

For this rich prize twelve horses, the pick of the handicap division, with the exception of Go Between, will start. Every horse is trained to the perfection of physical condition and the race should be a great struggle from the viewpoint of the spectator.

It was over this course that Broomstick had his memorable race with Irish Lad two years ago. He beat the latter a head after one of the most sensational races in many years. To do this Broomstick had to break all records for a mile and a quarter. He ran the course in 2:02 4-5, which is the world's record to-day.

The result to-day will hinge largely on racing luck. Horses that are fortunate at the start and that meet with no interference will probably be the factors at the finish. On a track like Brighton, with its sharp turns, quick beginners and horses that can race around the bends at top speed have a big advantage. For this reason Dandelion, Whimsical and Ram's Horn should beat the others. Hamburg Belle, at the weights and distance, seems to be seriously handicapped.

Flip Flap will probably go to the post second favorite to Dandelion. This little filly, with her cat like flanks, is the greatest of all the horses in the race over a long journey. Unfortunately, she is a slow beginner, and this is a serious handicap to a horse on a track like Brighton, particularly if the field is large. If she should be fortunate and meet with no mishap and can maintain a position of fourth or fifth during the early stages of the contest, she will probably win, as she is a great finisher, and will be fairly running over horses at the end.

The Brighton handicap is fourth on the programme and will be run about 3:45 p. m.

BYERS AND LYON IN LAST ROUND

ENGLEWOOD, N. J., July 14.—Eben M. Byers of Pittsburg and George S. Lyon of Toronto this morning at 10 o'clock over the Englewood links began the first round in the thirty-six-hole final of the twelfth annual amateur golf championship of the United States. The weather was as hot as on previous days, which would seem to put a premium on Lyon's endurance. The summary:

First hole, Byers won, 5 to 6; second, halved in 5; third, Lyon won, 3 to 6; fourth, halved in 4; fifth, halved in 5.

DUFFY AND KENNEDY TO TRY FOR DARTMOUTH 11

Lawrence Duffy, a former captain of the English High School football team and last year a student at Dartmouth, has decided to return to college in the fall, and will be a candidate for the varsity team.

Kennedy, another Boston boy at Dartmouth, is expected to make one of the end positions on the Dartmouth eleven next fall. He is a former Roxbury Latin player, and acted as a sub on the eleven last fall.

ERNE AND WELSH DRAW.

PHILADELPHIA, July 14.—Young Erne and Fred Welsh boxed six of the fastest kind of rounds in the wind-up at the National Athletic Club last night, and at the finish there was so little to choose between them that a just verdict would have been a draw. Erne had everything of physical advantage over the Englishman, but the latter offset them by his superior cleverness. Erne started in as though determined to clean up in time record, but Welsh was too elusive for him.

WHEN HE MEETS SAM BERGER

O'BRIEN RISKS TITLE

PHILADELPHIA, July 14.—That there is going to be a real fight—no mere exhibition with the gloves—when Philadelphia Jack O'Brien and Sam Berger meet in the ring of the National Athletic Club Monday night is sure. Everything proves this. The men are training as hard as they know how, are already in shape, and each is positive that he will knock the other's block off.

The bout is billed here as a heavyweight championship affair and such it will go down in pugilistic history if a knockout blow ends it before the limit—six rounds. The shifty Quaker is the heavyweight champion of the world, now that Jim Jeffries is out of the game, and if he gets careless and allows one of Berger's haymakers to reach his jaw the title will pass to the coast amateur champion. If the bout goes the limit no decision will be rendered.

Berger has been training at Oceanic, principally with Eddie McGlade and Patsy Corrigan, but he tackles any one who happens to come along. In that village there is a big blacksmith by the name of Tom Patterson, who used to work with Jim Jeffries when the latter was in training there. Jeffries was always pleased to have Patterson as a sparring partner, as the big wielder of the hammer had lots of speed, took plenty of punishment, and was able to hand out some pretty stiff jabs himself.

Patterson showed up there and offered to have a little go with Berger to see whether he was fit. Berger was ready for the mill and they were soon mixing it. In the first round Berger got a fast one to his man that put him out completely. Such a feat was never accomplished by big Jeffries, and it now behooves Philadelphia Jack to look out for his laurels.

Of course, O'Brien, confident as a champion should be, scoffs at the idea of falling before Berger, but the coast boy has weight and lots of strength and a wallop that does damage every time it lands. Added to Berger's accomplishment is confidence in his ability to lick the world.

O'Brien is in training here and is as busy as fighter ever was. He is not taking any chances, and is far from underestimating his opponent. While he looks on Berger as a sure victim, he trains as though he were going to meet Jeffries, figuring that it is a lot better to be ready for anything in the surprise package line that may be handed out to him. He realizes that with Berger it is do or die, and that he will fight with desperation, for the battle means everything to him if he can win. To O'Brien victory does not mean anywhere near as much, but defeat means the end of his ring career.

In a talk to-day O'Brien had the following to say:

"You can take it from me that I am ready to fight my best battle. I have never been accused of being foolish—some people say I never make a match that I cannot win, but that is rot. I am in the game to win, for there is more money in winning than in losing. It's the money I am after.

"This Berger has a lot of weight on me and that counts. For that reason I am training as hard as I know how. Then, friends tell me the kid is fast. That's another advantage. But I am sure he will have to weigh a ton and be as fast as lightning to beat me, and I guess he isn't up to those specifications.

"Although the fight is to go but six rounds, a man has to be in perfect shape to travel that distance at a fast clip. I am in shape to crawl through the ropes now, and next Monday will be on the job."

The following letter, received from Johnny Gleason, Berger's manager, shows what Berger and his friends think of the scrap:

Oceanic, N. J., July 13, 1906.

Sporting Editor:

Sam Berger, who is to box O'Brien six rounds at Philadelphia, is training at Oceanic. He will not have the excuse of lack of condition to offer if he is defeated, for he is training faithfully, and right now is ready and anxious for the fight to begin.

When O'Brien is to box most anybody six rounds it is very generally considered a sure thing that he will win. Arguments are made that on account of his great speed and knowledge of boxing he can win over heavier men who move slower.

For the first time in his career O'Brien is up against a boxer near his own class, in speed and ability. The question is, Will Berger's speed, extra weight and reach offset O'Brien's speed and ability? On paper the answer must be Yes, but July 16 will tell the tale. I am sure the public will say that Berger is the most likely successor to Jeffries now before the public.

There is a great interest taken in this contest, for there is at present living in New York a very large colony of Californians, and they are all acquainted with Berger's record, and, secondly, the winner of this contest will be looked upon as the world's heavyweight champion. Yours sincerely,

JOHN J. GLEASON,
Manager of Sam Berger.

GLIDDEN TOURISTS MEET WITH TWO BAD ACCIDENTS

By J. C. Kerrison.

FONDA, N. Y., July 14.—The first accident of the day to the Glidden tourists happened to the Clement Bayard, driven by Van Tyne, just outside of St. Johns. The car was going at top speed, making up lost time, when the right hand steering knuckle broke, letting the front of the car down instantly. The car was stopped and providentially without throwing out or injuring any of the passengers. It was a narrow escape, and those who witnessed the same are marveling thereat.

The run to this town, fifty-four miles from Utica, has so far been decidedly successful.

Will Birmingham, who is on Pardee's Packard and who drove the Packard truck up Mt. Washington last year, met with a mishap. He was fooling with the magneto while stopping here to be checked and in some manner got his left index finger caught, and so badly injured that a halt had to be made here long enough to permit of amputation of that member.

Wing of Boston, who left Utica among the first, is still in front. About the middle of the field came the Maxwell, driven by Kelsey, and right behind him came Snow in the Peerless.

GLIDDEN TOURISTS MAKE AN EARLY START FROM UTICA

UTICA, July 14.—The Glidden tourists left Utica this morning for Saratoga, a distance of ninety-six miles, for the third day's run of the tour from Buffalo to Bretton Woods, N. H. To-day's trip takes the autoists through Herkimer, Little Falls, Fonda and Gloversville, into Saratoga. The time schedule is as follows: Utica to Little Falls, 23 miles, 1 hour and 25 minutes; to Fonda, 54 miles, 3 hours and 12 minutes; to Gloversville, 73 miles, 4 hours and 18 minutes; to Saratoga, 96 miles, 5 hours and 34 minutes.

The second day's run in the A. A. A. tour was devoid of any particularly exciting features and, as a whole, was accomplished with but a single addition to the point losers. The unfortunate was James Laughlin with a Cleveland car, whose continued troubles with tires netted him a loss of [illegible] points for the day, he having previously started with a clean score. Eight others lost points during the day's run, but these only increased the scores captured yesterday.

There is every likelihood of the list of those with clean scores being increased as the committee will unquestionably return one or two points lost by several contestants, owing to discrepancies in the watches of the checkers. The four points lost yesterday by Percy Pierce have been returned to him, as it has been shown that there was an error on the part of the checker, so that he now starts even with the leaders.

Others to whom points will be returned are: [illegible], Stearns; J. H. McIntyre, Stoddard-Dayton; Ezra Kirk, Thomas; George M. Davis, Thomas; George Soules, Pope-Hartford; Philip S. Flynn, Pierce-Arrow; F. J. Pardee, Packard; Watson Coleman, White; W. W. Burke, Columbia; Charles G. Wridgeway, Peerless; Ernest Keeler, Oldsmobile; W. L. Davis, Pope-Hartford; Charles Schmidt, Peerless, and G. G. Bush, Packard.

The conditions under which the cars are competing are such as would cause delay to the very finest specimen of motor. There is still no reason for one to begin to pick a winner in either the Glidden or the Deming trophy contests. Nineteen cars are on even terms in the former and but three in the latter, they being two White and a Maxwell. The White cars are driven by Augustus Post and Watson Coleman and the Maxwell by C. W. Kelsey, who is carrying the flag of HEARST'S BOSTON AMERICAN. There are but two six-cylinder cars in the run and both are doing remarkable work.

One of these is the 1907 Pierce six, entered by Arthur Jervis. It was the last to get started and therefore the last to finish, acting as what might be termed a rear guard. The other is the Stevens-Duryea. It can hardly be said that the foreign cars are showing up to particular advantage, as each of the three entered have suffered penalties. The Massachusetts contingent is retaining its form, all entries having retained clean scores to the credit of themselves and the Bay State Auto Association, which they represent.

PITTSBURG, July 14.—For the eighth time this season Boston handed the Pirates another victory thereby gaining the unbounded admiration of the Smoky City fans who cannot do enough for teams that visit here and increase the average of the Pirates by letting themselves get defeated.

Pfeffer was in the box for the Boston tribe and allowed no one to get too familiar with him, especially after the third inning. The visitors could not meet Sam Leever often enough to get that extra run which they have found to be necessary of late.

This afternoon the tailenders will try hard to take their first game of the year from the Pittsburg team. It is probable that Gus Dorner will go in the mound.

ROCKINGHAM PARK CHAT.

BY EDWARD E. COGSWELL.

A red-hot day for racing, as weather perfect and the track at its best. Note the two-year-olds setting a new mark for the course for five furlongs—Killochan in a minute flat.

Everybody was pleased to see Charley Henshall pull off a winning trick, his debut among the select owners. He is noted as a prince of fellows. His filly, Dollie Dollars, has the right ring to the name, and, too, she looks to be the goods.

By the way, the boy who rode her, T. Clark, entered the class of winning jockeys at the meeting. By the style in which he handled the filly, it will not be the last time he will ride past the judges in the van.

Speaking of the jockeys, that boy Wiley has only four wins to his credit in the meeting, but his judgment in the handling of Croix D'Or in the second race certainly looked like the master hand. He rated him along to the proper moment, and then raced the others to a stand still. Only a few more well-timed mounts for him when owners will set up and take notice.

For a wonder Garner passed through the afternoon without a winning mount. While he has been first twenty-three times at the Salem track, there is nobody who thinks that it will be "23" for him very long.

All of the boys in the press stand were rooting for Kamshaw to carry off the honors in the fourth race, but they were doomed to disappointment. His owner, Mr. A. Henry Higginson (Mr. Shetland), is a favorite with the reporters on the Boston papers, who know him personally.

In the race for gentlemen drivers to-day there were received only four entries, but the crowd will be on hand to watch the event. Mr. Higginson will ride Montebank; Mr. Macomber does the honors on Sir Margrave; Mr. Shaw will sit California King, while Mr. Baker tries his hand on Subtle.

TORONTO, Ont., July 14.—The finals in the Canadian championship tournament will be played off to-day on the courts of the Niagara Tennis and Golf Club. Irving G. Wright of Boston will play E. P. Fisher of New York for the title.

Yesterday Wright defeated Harry D. Kirkover 6—4, 6—1, and in the doubles Wright and Kirkover beat E. P. Fischer and Don Carrol in straight sets. The first two also won another set by default.

Wright holds the Canadian championship title.

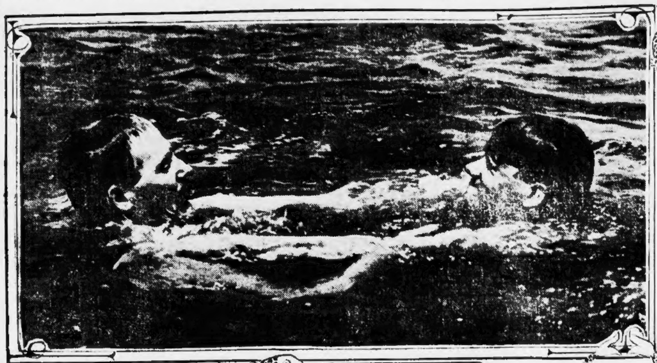
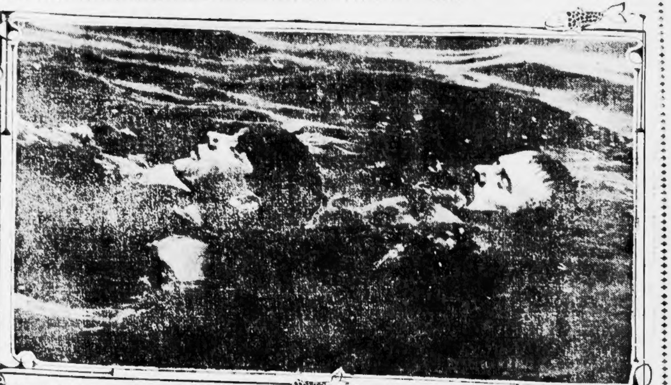
BASEBALL PILGRIMS MEET ST. LOUIS BOXING BERGER IS READY FOR O'BRIEN RACING AND ALL ATHLETICS

PROFESSOR GUS SUNDSTROM, EXPERT SWIMMER, SHOWS HOW TO RESCUE A DROWNING PERSON



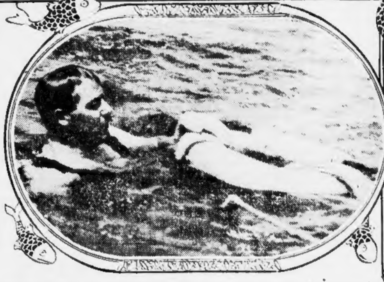


When the drowning person has so completely lost his senses as to be ready to grab the rescuer, it is not safe even for a strong man to approach him from the front. Get behind him, grip him by the hair or under the arms and twist him on his back. Then swim on your back to the shore. The picture above shows how to tow your man ashore. This is not as hard a feat as it looks, for when once you have the drowning man in tow his struggles do little harm. As long as he cannot turn around he is unable to clinch, and that is your only danger.
PROF. GUS SUNDSTROM.

This picture shows the wrong way to approach a person struggling in the water. Never try to get hold of a drowning person from the front. This has caused the death of many an expert swimmer and hundreds of fair swimmers, who would have rescued their men had they gone about things right. Remember that a drowning person is in a frenzy of fear, has no sense or judgment, and all he thinks about is getting hold of something that can be gripped. The grip of a man in this condition is fearfully strong, and once he has a hold few can throw him off. GET BEHIND the drowning person—man, woman or child. PROF. GUS SUNDSTROM.

EASTERN'S CRUISE ENDS.

BAR HARBOR, Me., July 14.—A twenty-five-mile run yesterday through the picturesque East Penobscot Bay and around the outer Mt. Desert Island carried the Eastern Yacht Club fleet into this harbor, where the cruise of 1906 of 200 miles along the New England coast was terminated. The yachtsmen held their annual banquet last evening at the Kebo Valley Club House, where the prizes were awarded.



The picture above shows the only safe and sure way to rescue a drowning person unless the rescuer is a strong and expert swimmer. Even if the latter is a "human fish," a life preserver will be useful. If you see a person sinking and there is a chance, throw a life preserver to him or as close to him as possible. Then jump in and swim out to help. A person drowning throws his arms about wildly, and if your aim has been good he may reach the life preserver. If he doesn't reach it, you can push it up against him. It's safer to have him clutch the preserver than the rescuer. In this picture you will see my son's hand clutching the preserver.
PROF. GUS SUNDSTROM.

The picture above shows another way to swim ashore with the person rescued. There is only one thing necessary to do this, and that is the one thing usually lacking. That is sense on the part of the person in trouble. If the man rescued is sensible and you can trust him, steady him up and then let him clasp you lightly around the neck, letting his legs float out behind you. Then you can swim with your arms as well as legs, which is impossible when towing a person ashore on his back. In a long swim this is a big advantage.
PROF. GUS SUNDSTROM.

The picture below shows the way a drowning man struggles with his rescuer instead of trying to help. The only chance there is to save the life of a panic-stricken person when he has clinched and is taking his rescuer down with him is to break the grip at all costs. Do not try to be gentle about this. Get your hand under the chin and force him away in that manner. If you have a chance, punch him in the face—if you knock him out, so much the better. He will stop struggling then and your work will be easy.
PROF. GUS SUNDSTROM.

PROF. SUNDSTROM TELLS HOW TO RESCUE A DROWNING PERSON

With the swimming season now on in full blast, almost daily reports from seaside resorts tell of drowning accidents and of brave but futile attempts at rescue by amateur life-savers in which the rescuer himself is often drowned. That any ordinarily good swimmer can, unaided, take a drowning man or woman out of the water is the statement of Gus Sundstrom, the noted swimming instructor of the New York Athletic Club. Mr. Sundstrom is a famous expert on aquatic subjects. He developed many of the well-known swimmers of the day and is an authority on practical life-saving. Mr. Sundstrom has written for the BOSTON AMERICAN a set of instructions outlining the best plan to pursue in getting a drowning person to shore.

BY GUS SUNDSTROM.

It is a remarkable fact that so many persons are drowned every summer at our bathing beaches in sight and in spite of the efforts of expert swimmers, and we frequently read of some persons being drowned and pulling his would-be rescuer down with these words at the end of the story: "Both were expert swimmers."

The explanation is very simple. Life-saving is, of course, dependent upon swimming, but is a separate science if one may call it that. A man may be a perfect swimmer himself, but be utterly helpless when confronted with the problem of pulling a man as big as himself, or worse still, an hysterical woman, to dry land, even over a distance of a hundred feet.

Should Learn to Save Life.

It is simply because they don't know how. Life-saving must be learned just as swimming is learned. It is much easier to learn than swimming, and every good swimmer who frequents public beaches should learn it that he may be in a position to avert a tragedy.

Three simple rules for life saving—the best I can give—are, keep cool, repeated three times. That is nine-tenths of it. A swimmer dashes out to a drowning man or woman, and, without stopping to think what will be the best way to approach the victim, he rushes in with the frequent result that the drowning person clinches him, and then—it is simply a case for grappling irons and "the bodies have not yet been found."

Those on the shore who try to assist a life-saver should remember that misdirected effort is much more harmful than if they do nothing. Only a few days ago I read of a case on one of the beaches along the Jersey coast where too much zeal on the part of the helpers on the beach resulted in the death of the drowning man and his rescuer.

A man was seen struggling outside of the life lines and yelling for help. One of the life savers attached to the pavilion hurled a life-buoy as far out as he could and then swam rapidly toward the drowning man, carrying the buoy with him. Just as he was about exhausted, the life-saver reached him and he clutched the buoy. The rescuer yelled for the spectators on the beach to pull in the line that was attached to the life-preserver. A dozen or more seized the rope and dashed up the beach at top speed, with the result that both men were swept under water, the drowning man clutched the rescuer and the waves broke over them and both were drowned simply because these people got excited and forgot what they were doing.

One Strong Point to Remember.

The good sense of this young swimmer in taking a life-buoy with him reminds me of something I want to say at the outset about saving drowning persons. There is only one even reasonably safe way to bring a drowning man to shore, and that is with a life-preserver. Always take a life-preserver, or a board, or anything you can find that has any buoyancy. Let him take a hold of that, and if there is no line attached, tow him in yourself. He can't get hold of you in that way and you can devote all your strength to swimming. In any and all cases don't let him get hold of you. There is no use in your both being drowned.

The question naturally arises, then, how are you going to prevent him from getting hold of you and at the same time get hold of him. All of that depends on the condition of the man you are after and whether he is capable of doing anything toward helping himself.

The safest way to tackle anybody (always supposing that there are no life-buoys around) is to approach them from the rear. Never go straight in front of a drowning man, because that gives him an excellent opportunity to wrap his arms around your neck and his legs around your body. You will then be unable to break his grip or swim, with the result that both of you will go down. Life-savers call that "locking" a man, and the boldest of them are afraid of a drowning man's "lock."

Swim Around the Victim.

When you swim up to a drowning man either swim or dive around him. If you are a good judge of distance under water it is a good scheme to dive, because he loses sight of you and doesn't know anything about what you are up to until you grab him.

When you come up behind him, swim in quickly and get him under both arms with your two hands. Grip your fingers tightly around his shoulders so you can hold his back squarely toward you and he has no chance to twist around if he should feel disposed to grab you.

Then, swimming on your back, you can drag him, shoulders first, through the water. As the back of his head is pushing through the water first it is comparatively easy to keep his face above the surface. And as long as a man in that condition has his face in the air he is less apt to struggle.

Of course this way of pulling a man out compels the life saver to do all his swimming with his legs, and for that reason all amateur swimmers should devote more attention to the leg movements in swimming as well as for the satisfaction of swimming properly. Very few ordinarily good swimmers get all that is possible out of their legs. A man with a good "kick" will have no difficulty in going ahead on his back and towing a man in this manner.

Surest Way of Effecting Rescue.

Now, that is to my mind the safest and surest way of making a water rescue. When dealing with a hysterical woman it is practically the only way that a life saver can safely approach her and swim out with her. The danger of becoming entangled with wet garments is added to the moral certainty that she will clutch you as hard as she can the moment you come within reach. Always keep her at arm's length.

If you go out for a man who has had some experience in the water—a good swimmer seized with cramps or something of that sort—you can often use a much better but more dangerous method than this one just described. Before you use it be sure that your man is in possession of his nerve and senses.

As I said before, it is always best to go at him first from the rear; then, after you have supported him for a few seconds if he is quiet and able to talk, you can reassure him confidently, and then if you think it safe use this method of getting him out:

Facing him in the water let him put his two hands on your shoulders or around your neck lightly. Then let him put one leg on each side of your body. You can then swim forward using your breast stroke with one hand working on each side of his body and your legs are free for action also.

This is unquestionably the best and quickest method of bringing a man to shore, but, as I said, it can be used only in such cases where the man who is in distress is cool enough to permit it, and you are sure that he will not suddenly clinch you with his arms and legs.

When you are up against the problem of getting two persons at once there is only one of two things to do, unless you are an unusually strong back swimmer. Take one of them out or hold both of them by the collars of their bathing suits, using that back plan that I outlined, until help comes.

Must Be a Strong Person.

If you are a strong back swimmer and the distance is not great you can bring both of them in by the method I have described, making them keep their backs toward you, and, taking one in each hand, swim as hard as you can with your legs. But, as I said, there are very few men strong enough to do that.

When two or three life-savers go out to get one man, much wasted effort will be spared by forming a chain, each man putting his hands on the leader's shoulders. In that way the drowning man, hanging on the shoulders of the last man in the life line, is towed in by the united efforts of the three.

I think that about winds up what I have to say on this subject. It is really a very simple matter for a good swimmer to take a person out of the water if he goes about it properly. It is a very serious proposition if he does not know how he is going to do it. Remember these points:

Use a life preserver if you can get one.

Never let the drowning person get a hold of you.

Don't lose your nerve.

WRESTLERS AT SCOTCH PICNIC

Hjalmar Lundin, the Swedish champion wrestler, who is to meet Frank Pascul, the St. Louis wrestler at the Caledonian picnic, August 4, is expected to return to Worcester during the present week and will finish his training at Lake Quinsigamond for the event. Lundin is at present touring the middle West and has met with success against all comers in finish contests, the only kind, by the way, in which he cares to compete. Last Sunday at Chicago he defeated Demetri, the Greek heavyweight with comparative ease. At Duluth he tossed Mattson in straight falls.

Lundin will work at Worcester for speed, at which Pascul is exceptionally good. In fact, it has been his great speed that has won for him a number of matches over the best wrestlers in this country. Though not so well known in the East as in the West, Pascal's record is one of length. He is best known as Professor Atlas of St. Louis, but because of there being another wrestler of the same name in the East Pascul prefers to use his legal instead of his professional name.

Pascul will arrive in Boston several days prior to the contest and will finish his work here. He is at present working at his private gymnasium in New York and is always in the pink of condition.

THREE RIDERS AT REVERE TO-NIGHT

Hugh MacLean, the crack rider, has a task on his hands to-night when he meets Elmer Collins of Lynn and Menus Bedell of New York at the Revere track in a twenty-five-mile race behind the motors, as he allows the pair a couple of laps each.

The Shoe City boy will have a big delegation to urge him on in his first race in big company and he will ride his best. He is the most promising of the new comers to the dangerous game, and many predict much from the youngster.

Bedell considers that he has not been seen in his best form and will take this opportunity to show his real pace.

There will be a five-mile sprint race for the professionals which will be a great attraction because Jimmy Moran will ride and also John Bedell, who won a lot of money on the circuit, and is almost as good as Frank Kramer, the champion.

Besides these two stars there will be many of local note, including Pat Logan, McDonald, McKinnon, Holbrook and others, and as there are prizes up for the leader at every mile there will be some tall hustling after the special trophies.

The one-mile handicap for "pros" will also bring out a brilliant field of the fastest riders in this section who will battle against one another.

CHASE DEFEATS POST.

Chase of Winchester won the singles championship of the Mystic Valley Lawn Tennis Association yesterday afternoon on the court of the Oakley Country Club, Watertown, by defeating Post of Milton comparatively easy in three straight sets.

DOESN'T THINK COURTNEY WILL QUIT CORNELL

NEW HAVEN, July 14.—Edward J. Savage, of this city, for three years member of the Cornell crews, and a prominent Cornell alumnus of this city, was asked to-day to discuss Coach Courtney's resignation. He said:

"Mr. Courtney has resigned several times to my certain knowledge and I do not regard his retirement as assured till his resignation is accepted. I see no special reason for his resigning just now. I think that the 'old man' will be found coaching Cornell crews next year all right.

"The secret of the success of Courtney at Cornell has been his absolute control of his crews—non-interference from any source. The same thing may be said of the success of John Kennedy at Yale. As long as Courtney has this he can succeed. In rowing there must be one man who will be in control absolutely to assure success."

MISS SUTTON WINS GAME

LONDON, July 14.—Miss May Sutton, the American tennis expert, and Mrs. Storry to-day defeated Misses Gazill and Boucher in the semi-finals, woman's doubles for the Welsh championships, played at Newport. The score stood 7—3, 9—7.

WHAT IS WRONG WITH OUR TEAM?

At the request of the BOSTON AMERICAN newspaper, Rev. Charles A. Crane, pastor of the People's Temple, has made a study of the Boston American League baseball club.

Rev. Mr. Crane is a baseball expert. If you don't believe it, read his diagnosis on "What is the matter with the Boston Americans?"

BY REV. CHAS. A. CRANE.

REV CHARLES A. CRANE

I Took a little vacation from books and folks t'other day and went to see "what is the matter with the Boston Americans?"

If they were ever diseased with victory they are cured. It has been a long time since they were like a postage-stamp—never licked but once.

I saw that favorite boy o' mine, Lou Criger, out on the ground catching a little, and he was the perfect picture of "What's the matter?" He is sick. So are they.

It would help their running ability if they would exongulate before retiring. They have too many thumbs which try to take the place and do the work of fingers. Hence the great muffing industry.

They lack a head. Hence they never get ahead. Some way should be found to get some more brains at work.

Listlessness is running quite [illegible] at their store. Team work is a minus quality. Coaching is a lost art. Even Artie Latham would be an improvement upon the lack of enterprise in base running. Mr. Murnane would be a great coach if they could but get him on the line.

Some of the players act as if John B. Moran were around to arrest the first fellow caught stealing a base.

The whole fact is that the boys are sick. They look well, but that doesn't win any game. They act well, but they are not actors. Their tongues are not coated, but tongues do not count in the present regime of umpires. Their pulse is strong and active and they have their nerve with them, but nerve and pulse, tho' a good combination, never made a base hit.

If one should undertake to diagnose their case he might be led to write it thus: The constituent parts of their disease are:

Ten parts headlessness.
Forty parts hitlessness.
Ten parts listlessness.
Ten parts slowness.
Ten parts teamlessness.
Twenty parts hopelessness.

There are other things "the matter" in addition to these, but these are enough to account for the distressing condition of the patient.

It is quite remarkable that such great numbers of men should attend the hospital every day to watch the disease get worse and worse.

But it is not a morbid curiosity which takes them there, but rather only another evidence of the truth of the words of the poet, who says "Hope springs eternal in the human breast."

The game I witnessed reminded me of Shakespeare's "Comedy of Errors," and also of the good old game of "Give Away" in checkers.

Yours truly,
CHAS. A. CRANE.

GARDNER AND LEWIS TO BOX

Willie Lewis and Jimmy Gardner were last night matched to box fifteen rounds at the Lincoln A. C., Chelsea, on the evening of July 21. The pair will meet at the welterweight limit, 142 pounds. The winner will be given a bout with either Honey Mellody or Joe Walcott. [illegible] Flaherty will referee.

Colby [illegible], amateur featherweight champion, and [illegible] of South Boston will meet in the semi-final bout of eight rounds at the Lincoln Club July 21. Kid Sheehan of New York and Young Cahill of Roxbury will meet in the preliminary bout at the same meeting.

Jimmy Gardner and Peter Sullivan have been signed to show in Providence a week after Gardner's bout with Lewis.

PULLIAM MAY HEAD BOSTONS

There is a whisper going the rounds that President Pulliam of the National League has been approached in connection with the ownership of the Boston Nationals, and he has been quoted as saying he would like nothing better than to take hold of the club if he succeeds in obtaining the backing. The fact that he is in such close touch with Director Conant of the local club gives some flavor of probability to this deal. It is needless to say that this city would give a decided boost to the National League club here. [illegible] with all phases of [illegible] of Pittsburg, with which he was connected [illegible]

READERS SAY YANKEE SWEETHEARTS ARE FAR BETTER THAN BRITISHERS

Lord Northcliffe's Views Sharply Criticised

INTEREST in the question suggested by Lord Northcliffe's assertion that Englishmen are better love makers and husbands than Americans has not abated. Letters are being received in such numbers that the Home Page Editor feels almost as sorry as many of his correspondents that space forbids printing more than a few at a time.

Here is what Lord Northcliffe, the distinguished English editor now visiting this country, said:

"The Englishman makes love better, is a more devoted, poetic wooer and makes his wife happier than the AMERICAN."

Do YOU believe this is true?

From what YOU have observed of the workings of YOUR OWN HEART, have YOU any opinion on the subject?

Do YOU subscribe to what Lord Northcliffe says?

The only rules for letter writers are that the communications must not exceed in length 100 words and that they be written on one side of the paper only.

SAD FATE OF A RICH AMERICAN GIRL

I REALLY CAWN'T SAY... DON'TCHERKNOW! I MAY BE ABLE TO SEE THE POINT BY TO-MORROW
DON'T YOU THINK THAT IS A FUNNY STORY?

She married an Englishman and has just told him a joke

What Readers Think About The Question

AMONG the letters received by the Editor of the Home Page in answer to Lord Northcliffe's startling views are the following:

AMERICANS UNSELFISH

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

NOT only does the American in his frankness and impetuosity make a successful lover, but by treating his wife in a spirit of equality as comrade and friend and his unselfish devotion to her comfort, he proves himself the best husband in the world. MRS. W. R. STANTON.

BRITISHERS TOO IDLE

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

THE American girl who marries the Englishman is lured on by ambition and by visions of an imaginary castle situated in England. True American girls are satisfied with practical American men. Englishmen ought to be ashamed for having so much leisure time to devote to love making. We prefer men who work more and talk less. AN AMERICAN GIRL.

OPPOSITES ATTRACT

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

LOVE laughs at locksmiths, also at accidents of birth, such as geographical lines, race distinction, or national traits. In love, opposite temperaments blend and it may be that our vivacious American girls marry the phlegmatic Englishmen in obedience to the law of evolution which aims at the perfection of the species. JOHN J. EGAN.

ENGLISH ARE PERSISTENT

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

ENGLISHMEN do not know how to make love better than Americans. If they are more successful it is only because they are more persistent. They set out to do a certain thing, and they continue until their object has been accomplished, or there is absolutely no chance to accomplish it. A. ALEXANDER.

"YANKEE DUDE 'LL DO"

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

THE American girl to the English dude,
Says his love-making is rather crude.
It stands so much for dollars and dimes
That it leaves poor love-god far behind
And to her seems almost rude.
But her boys in blue are full of life,
Not looking for gold, but just a sweet wife;
So she heaves a sigh, and says without jest
That the boys of the Stars and Stripes are the best
And her Yankee dude 'll do.

C. F. GANSMANN.

SAME RACE, AFTER ALL

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

ENGLISHMEN do not make love better than Americans for the following reasons: 1. The wooing of American women by Englishmen is no more than what may be reasonably expected of nations of the same race whose relations are cordial. 2. If love-making is the result of centuries of development in the art, the Englishman has no more advantage on his side than the American. 3. Love is not merely an art. Heart answereth heart. 4. Neither is love extinguished by business zeal. 5. Women love strong, masterful, successful men, a type very common in prosperous America. D. J. POWELL.

IT DEPENDS ON THE MAN

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

I THINK that some Englishmen know better how to make love than some Americans, and some Americans know better than some Englishmen. L. STRAUSS.

SCORE QUICK COURTSHIPS

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

GOOD work and fast work seldom harmonize. Lord Northcliffe is correct about the American love-making. Those "hurry up" lovers are the very ideals of divorce lawyers. V. E. C.

Learn the Secret of Tact if You Want to Succeed

TACTFULNESS is the most valuable of qualities.

Far more things come under that heading than may at first sight appear, and, indeed, all fine feeling, sympathy and that genius for doing and saying the right thing which some people possess may be traced to the possession of this elusive quality.

It sometimes happens, however, that the very people most desirous of possessing it are those who seem lacking in the qualification, and in this case the want may almost certainly be put down to excessive nervousness.

In such cases there is one rule easily followed which will save much anxiety and even agony to the nervous, and that is the golden rule of silence.

It is quite wonderful how often one may, with advantage, smile and be silent, and least said soonest mended is an old saw that, remembered, will save many a heartache.

The very great talker is frequently a totally tactless person, and the rather silent listener is usually the reverse, for by possessing one's soul in silence one avoids the worry which so often results in saying the one thing we should leave unsaid.

Points to Remember

A tactful person may be defined as one with whom one always feels safe.

Who cannot call some such person to mind? One who you know will not ask awkward questions, who will steer by the subjects you just then shrink from discussing, and which should be for that matter—seen without seeing (so fine and alert are her perceptions) are not welcome, and whom we may rely on for an entire absence of anything palpably "tactful."

Thoughtlessness is usually the cause of tactlessness.

Girls do not sufficiently consider suitability or adaptability.

To discuss literature with a bookish friend before a bored and forcedly silent circle is not tactful; to arrive back from school so full of class interests that one's family soon loathes the very name of school; to return from a visit so primed with one's own doings as to show no interest in other people's; to discuss clothes ad nauseam before the male sex—all show the most obvious want of savoir-vivre.

Beware of a Joke

Such minute details make people lovable or otherwise.

It is so easy, too, to impart a pleasing turn to the commonplaces of existence, by a "quiet suggestion to your neighbors that their personality tells on you," to consult people instead of dictating to them, to refer questions to elders or any one present who rather "goes in" for the matter under discussion, to avoid anything approaching a didactic tone.

To know how to sympathize is an art in itself. For to many people pity is an almost worse draught to swallow than unkindness, and to force pity on those who do not seek it is an unwarrantable liberty.

The ill-luck of any but intimate friends should be ignored unless they themselves allude to it, and even then delicacy is needed; few people like to be objects of compassion.

A great want of tact, too, is to presume on friendship to ask indiscreet questions. Friends and relatives have a right to and probably a wish for as much decent reserve as any one else.

Some people appear to harbor the delusion that anything may be said "as a joke," whereas often a would-be facetiousness but adds to the gaucheness of a remark, and all but the most thick-skinned soon learn to dread and avoid the candid friend, or the one whose sense of humor is too much in evidence.

When one is conscious of having said a wrong thing, however, it is usually best, unless one is very sure of one's powers, to attempt no explanation, for this frequently results in worse disaster.

Most unbearable of all perhaps are those who see "double meanings" on every occasion.

It is underbred and disagreeable in any one. In a girl it is the very limit of bad taste.

To force others to compliment one or in default to seem rude is the height of gaucheness and folly.

To bemoan one's poverty (if real) to the rich, one's plainness to a reigning belle and one's age to the young are all want of tact, for they can only produce discomfort in those more lucky than ourselves.

Knitting as a Mind Cure

"MY prescription, madam," said a physician to a lady who came to him suffering from some nerve trouble, "is that you knit two hours daily."

"Knit!" exclaimed the lady, in amazement. "Why on earth should I knit?"

"Because nothing is more soothing to the nerves," said the medical man. "Nothing conduces to such a calm and cheerful frame of mind. I could prescribe valerian for you, but knitting will be better. It will do you much more good. I believe that a month will cure you."

He spoke from experience. He had already prescribed the treatment, with great success, to a number of other women.

Exactly wherein lies the virtue of this simple cure for disordered nerves it would perhaps be difficult to to discover. It may be that there is some hypnotic action in the swift movement of the shining needles upon which the knitter's eyes are fixed.

"SHADOWS OF NEW YORK"

By Sidney Warwick

Copyright, 1906, by American Journal Examiner.

"YOU can leave the word 'blackmail' out of our discussion. I have been rather unfortunate in some er extensive speculations lately. I won't bore you with particulars, but we men of affairs have unfortunately reason to know that sometimes a trifling mistake may wreck a financial coup involving thousands. I made such an error of judgment only yesterday—I am not too proud to admit it; we are none of us infallible," said Mr. Delamere, "ladling out" his rounded periods in a stagy manner which struck him as vastly effective. "So under these circumstances, in which I am sure you will sympathize with me, I feel justified in appealing to you to help me to make that loss good."

"On what grounds do you feel justified if it is not impertinent to inquire?" said Herries.

"Grounds," replied Mr. Delamere irately, "that can hardly be ignored by the gentleman I once knew as Mr. John March, and the champion of a certain lady in distress, whose charming portrait relieves the sordid monotony of many billboards. Pretty good reasons, I take it," he added complacently.

As Delamere uttered his threat, Herries saw the velvet curtain that masked the door of the billiard room move slightly.

Was the "comedy" that Armadale had promised about to begin? Delamere's back was to the curtain; he had no suspicion, evidently, that the room contained another door.

"Come," cried Delamere impatiently as the millionaire did not answer, "do you suggest terms? Or am I to carry certain information to Mulberry street? You understand me well enough."

"I certainly understand that you are even a worse scoundrel than I took you for in the days when I was known as March," replied Herries quietly.

He was as much in the dark as ever as to Armadale's intended counter-stroke. But a glance across the room at the red curtain informed him that Armadale was about to play his hand.

For, quite quietly, behind Delamere's back, Armadale's hand had stolen out and was pinning a sheet of newspaper in front of the curtain, while Armadale's face nodded vigorously to Herries, as if to give him his cue, before he let the curtain fall into place again that hid him from sight.

An Inspiration

Herries was puzzled. Across the long room he could see that over the printed columns of letterpress the artist had executed a hasty sketch in black crayon, though at that distance he could not distinguish clearly what it represented or what the writing underneath was. He was more puzzled than ever.

Meanwhile, Delamere, steadily growing uneasy at Herries's imperturbability, assumed a more blustering manner.

"Come, Herries; all this attempted bluff is wasted upon me. I've got the whip hand, and if I'm compelled I shall use my power to some effect. It wouldn't be pleasant for you to be dragged to the dock, you and your accomplice, Olga Vail. Treat me well and you may rely on my silence. But make an enemy of me and——"

Freddy Delamere came to a sudden dead stop.

Noticing Herries looking hard at something behind him, he turned quickly, saw the sheet of newspaper pinned up against the red. He made a quick step toward it, then seemed utterly to collapse.

He turned quite white; his knees knocked together; his teeth showed a disposition to chatter.

For, done in a few bold lines of black crayon over the sheet of letterpress, he saw a life-like presentation of himself in his rôle of hurdy-gurdy man, and underneath was written:

"You haven't paid me yet for this sketch of yourself done four years ago, Freddy. I'm tired of waiting for my money, and think of offering it to Mr. Arthan of Maiden Lane."

The Truth Dawns

For a moment Herries looked at his visitor amazed. Then the truth flashed on him. He had told Arthan, the jeweller, that the face of the man in the snapshot seemed in some way familiar; on Delamere's face was the cut, noticeable in the photograph of the plunderer of the stone; and in Delamere's face he found the explanation of that familiar look that had puzzled him. The rifler of the Mirror of the Moon had had the amazing effrontery to try and blackmail him!

Delamere must have seen the accusing look in Herries's face, for before a word was spoken he cried out desperately:

"I—I don't know what this means; but it's a lie to say it's a sketch of me! I—I wasn't within five miles of Maiden Lane yesterday!" Delamere was in the clutch of overpowering terror.

Armadale came from behind the curtain with a grim smile.

"A pity you try to invariably avoid paying your debts, Delamere," he said. "I always felt it was a pleasing little habit that would land you in trouble some day!"

Freddy's teeth were chattering so violently that he was incapable of answering. Armadale turned to Herries.

"This gentleman here once, about four years ago, made quite a hit in a hurdy-gurdy song at the halls," he explained; "he got me to do a sketch of him in character for a window-bill—like that," pointing to the design in black chalk.

"Of course he never paid me for my work. You object to pay your debts on principle, don't you, Delamere? When you showed me the photograph in the paper, Mr. Herries, I recognized the central figure at once; years ago I had helped with suggestions for that very make-up. And as if to make my conviction doubly certain, who should pass the window at that moment but Mr. Delamere himself, with the cut on his hand—the result of 'the bike accident,' eh, Freddy?"

Delamere was trembling from head to foot. Had he not supported himself by clutching the back of a chair he must have fallen. He would have stammered out denials, even though he knew they would avail him nothing, but his tongue clove to the roof of his mouth. His guilt was known!

Accused of Theft

"I think I've kept my promise, Mr. Herries," said Aramsdale, coolly; "and so, though I am not very fastidious about my company, as I draw the line at blackmailers, I'll leave you to deal with this gentleman, and smoke one of the cigars you spoke of in the billiard room in the meanwhile."

And the artist passed through into the next room.

"Mr. Herries, it's all a base slander!" cried Delamere, at last finding his voice. "It's a plot of this man's to injure me. The thing's absurd on the face of it——"

"Where is the diamond you stole?" demanded Herries sternly, breaking in on the man's shrill denials.

Herries was conscious of a tremendous sense of relief and gratitude to Armadale. One serious menace to the security of his and Rosamund's future was lifted.

"I have stolen no diamond," protested Delamere, almost on the verge of tears. "You wrong me. Upon my sacred word of honor I——"

John Herries walked to the door and locked it and put the key in his pocket.

"Now," he said quite quietly, "unless you confess everything I shall give you the soundest thrashing you ever had in your life. You have two minutes in which to make your choice, Mr. Delamere."

Delamere was very white. He searched Herries's face desperately, and the conviction grew upon him that the threat would be kept. Herries had taken out his watch, and was watching the minute hand. One painful minute passed; the wretched Freddy blurted out desperately.

"I—I throw myself on your mercy, on your known kindness of heart, Mr. Herries. I'll confess everything. I am that unhappy man who was misguided enough—for a wager—I assure you, for a wager—to fall through Mr. Arthan's window. But I haven't got the stone which I had, of course, meant to return to you when I had won my bet! It wouldn't be any use your prosecuting me even if you dared," he added, suddenly realizing that his knowledge of John Herries's past gave him a certain advantage even yet. "For, by mistake, I passed the Mirror of the Moon to a complete stranger!"

WOMEN readers of the BOSTON AMERICAN are on the watch for the camera man these days. When he started on his daily round of the retail district for snapshots of shoppers, he thought Boston women would dodge him.

But he was mistaken. He finds eager women waiting for him at stores patronized by readers of this newspaper. Scores of women have an eye on him.

But remember he takes but one picture a day. He is on the street daily between 10:30 o'clock and noon.

He may get YOU any day. When he does, all you have to do to win the award is to call at the BOSTON AMERICAN office, identify the picture and the money will be handed to you. If you don't want to call, send a photo of yourself and a check will be forwarded to your address.

The snapshot on this page Thursday was identified yesterday. The lucky woman shopper is Miss Mary Frazier of Lynn. The photograph was taken in front of the store of Jordan Marsh Company at 11 o'clock Wednesday morning.

FOR THE CHILDREN.

The autobiography of Buster Brown—A series of Foxy Grandpa pictures in brilliant colors.

Why Children Need Many Meals a Day

IT may be explained briefly thus:

We are all, so long as we live, burning. Our bodies are always making heat, by a chemical combination between our food and the air we breathe. Without food, even if you lived in the hottest country in the world, your body would grow stone cold, and life in it would cease if it were covered with never so many blankets.

Now, in infancy and childhood this body-fire burns more quickly than in adult life.

A baby's pulse is running much more rapidly than that of its mother. The number of beats of her pulse in a minute, if she is in health, is about 72—of the baby's, about 130 to 140.

Her blood takes twenty-two seconds to circulate around her body, the blood of her baby but twelve seconds.

She draws about eighteen breaths in a minute, the baby about thirty-five per minute during the first months of its life, about twenty-eight per minute during its second year and twenty-six per minute in its fifth year. The pulse of a child in its second year is about 110 per minute.

Even in its tenth year, a child's pulse beats normally ninety in the minute, against seventy-two to seventy-five of the adult.

Growth, rapid increase of weight, takes place in youth, but it is far greater during the first year than at any other time. The healthy baby is twice as heavy at six months old as it was at birth, and three times as heavy at a year old as at birth.

From all this it will be seen that plenty of food is more urgently needed during early childhood than at adult age.

For instance, a baby needs to be fed every two hours during the first weeks of its life. If you tried to rear a baby from birth on one meal a day it would probably die, as many grown people eat but once in twenty-four hours.

If a baby goes a few hours without food its temperature falls; this is simply because the fire in its little body is burning at so rapid a rate that it needs frequent replenishment with fresh fuel.

$1,300,000 TO ART MUSEUM BY BRIMMER WILL

$1,000,000 in Real Estate and Fine Collection of Paintings and Objects of Art.

The Boston Museum of Fine Arts will come in for property in real estate worth more than $1,000,000, pictures and art objects valued at about $300,000 and $15,000 in cash, under the will of Marianne Brimmer, widow of Martin Brimmer, filed in the Suffolk Probate Court yesterday; while Harvard College gets $50,000, the Massachusetts General Hospital $20,000 and the Widows' Society of Boston $2,000. The bequests to the Art Museum existed under the will of Mr. Brimmer, but were contingent upon the death of Mrs. Brimmer and the probating of her will.

This is the largest bequest ever left to the Art Museum. The real estate includes the property on the corner of School and Washington streets, so long known as the "Old Corner Bookstore." This will probably be sold, as the Museum needs money for its new building on Huntington avenue.

Among the pictures are a number of pastel and charcoal drawings by Millet and his painting, "The Reapers," valued at $50,000 to $100,000; picture of the Virgin Mary adoring the infant Jesus, by Agnolo di Domini; portrait of Mrs. Skinner by Copley and Counselor Dunn by Stuart; landscapes by Chrome, Constable and Michel, "Chant d'Amour," by Burne-Jones; "La Marguerite," by W. M. Hunt, and "The Sphynx," "The Fisherman" and "The Fisherman and Genii," by Elihu Vedder. Among the art objects are a Chinese cloisonne incense burner, three tapestries, a frame of tiles over a window from a Constantinople mosque, a vase in green jade, an elephant in cloisonne, the Pesaro vase and choice of Japanese vases, a medal of Johannes Aloisius by Pesaro, and two minatures by Cosway and one by Philippe de Champagne.

This is a great summer resort in Canton, 14 miles out. The Electric Road has a magnificent grove, hotel, pavilion and bath houses there. It is the most beautiful lake, spring water, clear as crystal, great fishing, bass, perch, pickerel, etc. On this land is a beautiful grove, high bluffs and gentle shores. The most sightly points will be worth a fortune in a few years. In my grove stands a great monolith, the Indian god Manitou, as legend tells, and close to the high altar of Manitou is the grave of a great Indian Chief. In the woods are great granite crags towering above the trees and commanding a grand view of hill and dale and lake and shore. Here you can, with the material on the ground, build a rustic log cabin or a stone castle. These lots will make a big profit for you, as there is a great demand for water fronts and no supply. In Whose Name Should Savings for Your Children Be Deposited?

Is It Better That the Bankbook Should Have Your Name on the Cover, or the Names of Those for Whom You Are Saving?

Mr. W. H. Lyon, of No. 114 Brook avenue, Dorchester, has written the following letter to the editor of this newspaper:

> Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:
>
> Accepting your kind offer to write regarding any subject that may interest one, I most respectfully suggest that you write an editorial on the following:
>
> Do you think it wise for a working man to deposit savings for his children out of his pay, or do you think it a better plan to put money in the bank in the father's name?
>
> I have heard the question argued pro and con, and, like everyone, I have my individual opinion.

Mr. Lyon's topic for discussion is one that interests not only ONE, but a great many thousand working people. The general subject OUGHT to interest a great many thousand more than it does.

The usual arguments in favor of putting savings in the names of the children are: 1. That the father is less likely to withdraw the funds, feeling they are not his property. 2. That it is good for the children to feel that they have money in the bank, cultivating in them the habit of saving at an early age. 3. That they are more easily encouraged to save for themselves, if they know that they are adding to a goodly sum already deposited to their credit.

On the other hand men argue that a man is likely to deposit a larger sum in his own name, as he is not handicapped by the feeling that he musn't put in money that he may need for himself a little later. They also say, "You are going to use your own money for the children, anyway. What use is there in placing it in their name?"

There are other arguments on both sides, but these are the principal ones.

It seems to the writer of this little editorial for Mr. Reader-Editor Lyon that the question of whose name is on the bankbook is not an extremely important one. If you would save for yourself presumably you would save for your children, and vice versa.

In whose name your savings should stand at the bank is, it would seem, a very, VERY small matter compared to this—that there should be savings in SOMEBODY'S name.

Wise men for a great many years have been saying, and writing, and preaching, that WHATEVER you earn you should save a PART of it for "a rainy day."

Foolish men, for as many years, have been listening, and nodding, and agreeing, and putting it off until too late.

The advice is as good to-day as ever—perhaps, in these days of money, even more valuable. Save part of what you earn. As your wages grow larger, increase the proportion of your savings. Then there will be money when it is needed, for sickness, for old age, for your children, or for your WIDOW.

Do not forget that there is as even a chance of your wife becoming a widow as there is of your being a widower. How do you like to think of the possibility that your wife may have to marry again—perhaps a man she does not love—simply to get YOUR children properly supported and educated? Is it not your duty to see, if you can, that this doesn't happen after you have ceased to live?

It seems to the writer that Mr. Lyon's question is best answered thus: Save money in your children's names if that seems best, or save it in your own if THAT seems best. BUT SAVE MONEY.

P. S.—If your wife is the right kind of a wife, she is as saving, cautious and far-seeing as you are. Why not put it in HER name, or in BOTH yours and hers?

IF

By Harry B. Metcalf

If we could have this weather in the frigid ides of March,
How easily from coal trust prices we could knock the starch!

If we could feel the Wintry zephyrs now that once we cursed,
We'd blow the wicked ice trust up so high that it would burst!

If we could manage to survive with little or naught to eat,
How quickly we'd destroy the trust preservative of meat!

If, finally, it were ordained that man should never die,
O Joy, the vile insurance trust we'd promptly send sky-high.

George Fred Williams on the New Birth of Democracy

THE following interview on "The Renaissance of Real Democracy," was dictated to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter by the Hon. George Fred Williams, former member of Congress and in 1900 Massachusetts member of the Democratic National Committee.

By George Fred Williams

THE Renaissance of Real Democracy is simply the opening of the eyes of the people to the truths which were the moving forces of the platform of 1896.

The money forces were able, in that campaign, to befog the national platform by appeals to prejudice and ignorance on the money question, but in point of fact the whole platform constituted a splendid protest against the perversions of government by the money power, which had controlled it without a break for a quarter of a century.

The press, controlled by this same power, had insisted that the rulers of money and industry were the only true guides in political progress.

The giant money forces were combined to create the belief that whoever attacked the domination of government by the industrial leaders attacked the prosperity of the country, were leading a general attack upon the wealth producers of the land.

The banks controlled money. The railroads controlled the avenues of trade.

The banks and the railroads were themselves in the hands of high finance, which reached into all the great industries of the country.

It was not then realized that those who controlled money and the railroads were gradually building up a system of industrial monopoly, the roofs of which are now beginning to tumble into the foundation. It has taken ten years for people to learn that these leaders of high finance were not only absolutely immoral, but even criminal, in their scheme of aggrandizement.

Much is now clear which was only dimly seen in the year 1896, and it is now understood that the great Money and Railroad Trusts have been the deliberate builders of a system of monopoly throughout the country.

It is they who have made the Coal Trust defiant of human rights and of human needs. It is they who, by their unlawful discrimination, have set up the greatest monopoly of the world, the Standard Oil Trust, and have ruthlessly destroyed its competitors.

It is they who have placed the Trust in practical possession of the great steel industry, and particularly of the sources of its raw material. It is they who by unlawful favors have put the animal food of the entire republic into the control of a few unprincipled exploiters.

It is they who have perverted the great life insurance companies of the country, and have turned what should have been the savings banks of the people into dens of thieves.

In other words, it now appears that a set of absolutely unprincipled and lawless men have been teaching us our morals, making our laws, and, worse than all, preventing the enforcement of law where their misdeeds were involved.

Everyone now sees what was so plain to those men of 1896 who constructed the great declaration of principles at Chicago. This opening of the people's eyes now presents to us a great mass of men who see, as compared to the economic babes who only felt ten years ago.

When, to-day, the very men who in 1896 were fearful of Mr. Bryan and what he represented are now turning to him as a rescuer, they are merely bearing witness to their own enlightenment as to the truths upon which the real Democracy presented its first candidate since the days of Jackson.

It is now seen by all right-thinking men that if high finance has shown itself to be fraudulent, criminal and even, as in the case of the Beef Trust, murderous, there is but one remaining resort for a healthy republic, namely, the resort which Jefferson and Jackson found always available and responsive—the honesty, justice and patriotism of the great masses of the people. Where, it may be fairly asked, is there hope for the regeneration of our institutions, political and commercial, unless it be found in the sturdy character of the people of the republic?

McCall and Perkins, in 1896, held up the money which they stole from the people's savings, with hypocritical appeals to save the honor of the country.

Mr. Baer left the Democratic party in 1896, with protests against national dishonor, that he might more perfectly fix the monopolistic control of his master, Morgan, upon the coal supply of the country.

The best conducted railroad in the world is claimed to be the Pennsylvania Railroad, and we find its management honeycombed with corruption, favoritism and lawlessness.

Food of the people was poisoned by the Beef Trust ten years ago as ruthlessly as it was a year ago; but the people would not then believe the utter immorality of the ruling forces, which made possible even wholesale poisoning for purposes of profit.

Hence it is that to-day the candidate who was so maligned by the money power in 1896 is regarded as a conservative leader. Yet no one will deny that he has gone forward and not backward in every year of his political work in the last decade. His present position is indicative merely of the fact that though he started in 1896 with a progressive programme, the people seem to-day to have even outstripped him in their demands for a general political regeneration.

Such, in my judgment, is the philosophy of the renaissance of real democracy. I should not, however, do justice to the question if I did not recognize some of the instruments with which this change has been effected. In my judgment the two most potent individual factors have been President Roosevelt and Mr. Hearst.

In dealing with the President, I can only echo the comments of Senator Tillman who, while he severely criticised the retreat of the President on the rate bill, gave him credit for creating the public sentiment which made that bill, in any form, possible. The merit of the President lies in the honesty of his impulses, but his standing with the people is due principally to the fact that he is not mastered by the money power. The baleful influence of high finance in Washington, which seems to creep through all walls like the plague, has not infected him to the extent of destroying his manhood.

I regret as much as his best friends could regret his surrenders here and there, but I rejoice that he has not hesitated in the face of wrong to make a determined attack.

All the souvenirs which could be collected from his possessions could not equal in value the muck rake with which he has stirred up the powerful sinners of the country.

I do not think it fair to say that he has been inspired by the platform of 1896. It is much fairer to say that, like an honest man, he has attacked the evil as soon as he saw it, whether it was pointed out by Bryan or by his own conscience.

I hesitate somewhat to speak as fully as I might of the services of Mr. Hearst, as I am addressing a representative of his papers, but I do feel that his service in arousing and leading public sentiment against existing abuses is one of the godsends of American present politics.

I have fought through so many campaigns when the press seemed to be absolutely locked against a fair presentation of aggressive Democracy, that I appreciate to the full the existence of a paper which neither fears nor respects the blighting force of the money power in the journalistic field. To have a set of powerful newspapers in the country, which hates and despises the misdeeds of high finance, is to have great champions where for a quarter of a century the bravest have feared to enter the lists.

In 1900, when the forces of '96 had been beaten down by the money power, and our party was prostituted to its ends, Mr. Hearst fought a valiant fight and sowed the seed of hope among the people, the fruits of which we are now gathering.

With respect to the future of our radical Democracy, I must express the belief that we are at the edges of a political revolution. It is true that the people soon forget, but it is likewise true that they are not satisfied until they have struck the blow. Hence I have faith that the aroused public sentiment of to-day will persist until 1908, and that the hands of those who are fighting for rights, whether Republicans or Democrats, will be upheld by the popular vote.

It then lies with those who are entrusted with power to execute faithfully the public will. The politicians in both parties who have been in the secret service of the money power must now abdicate, and it is a part of the duty of those who have fought the people's fight to see that these traitors do not come in stealthily by night and deface the work which we shall do by day.

For my part, I welcome an honest fight along the lines indicated by Mr. Churchill's candidacy in New Hampshire, just as I am satisfied to have La Follette doing the righteous work in Wisconsin, in the name of a party other than my own.

When the two parties begin to vie in such efforts, the ideal conditions exist for political regeneration.

Editor BOSTON AMERICAN:

Now that Lawyer Henry C. Long has called the attention of the press, public and Governor to the frightful abuses of our insane, I believe it to be the duty of all who have relatives, friends and acquaintances in our State asylums and penal institutions to lend a helping hand to Mr. Long, who will not cease in his efforts to right these great wrongs and have enacted a statute giving three years in prison to any attendant detected in maltreating a patient or prisoner and convicting criminally any superintendent of our State institutions who only discharges an attendant for cruelty and allows him to escape to an other institution where he continues his dastardly work.
